New 1920 MODEL Mitchell SIX

Some Visible Revisions

Of course the major improvements lie in the chassis. They lie in larger parts, in better materials, in new heat treatments. They lie in greater smoothness, in finer workmanship, in more exacting tests. Every part has been studied for super-strength and endurance, for lessened wear, for lower upkeep, for better performance and less waste power.

But many improvements are conspicuous. The body is new, in lines, in color and in finish. It is ideal modern type.

Extra finish coats give an enduring luster. There is a new-grade top which keeps its newness. It has plate glass windows in the back.

High-grade leather is used in the upholstery, so the car does not grow shabby. Interlaced hair is used for the filler, so the cushions will keep their shape.

The car is uniquely roomy. Note this 5-passenger model has a 120-inch wheel base. Compare that with the usual.

In the engine, the cylinders are ground to give longer life, more power, greater economy.

The ball-bearing steering gear is of a type which doesn't tire the driver. The new dashboard arrangement is ideal.

The rear springs are long cantilevers, which make this the easiest-riding car you will find. Yet we have proved by long and radical tests that these springs are unbreakable in use.

The body is of costly construction. We use an expensive frame material to give enduring staunchness. Thus we have corrected one great fault in old types.

This car shows our new criterions in every touch and detail. Its distinction is most impressive, even in these outer parts. You can see that this Six won't deteriorate as old-type cars have done.
