STORIES OF DAME LADYBIRD AND HER FRIENDS

By Ethel Allen Murphy
(Written for the U. S. School Garden Army, Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior.)

MISS GOLDEN EYES AND "THE DEVIL'S RACE HORSE"

Part II.

A queer procession of tiny insects, that looked for all the world like brownies, was passing across a neighboring leaf. They were hopping about turning somersaults, and cutting all sorts of capers.

"Ah, Leaf Hoppers," said Madame Mantia. "Don't be so frivolous, my dears. There is so much serious work to do in this world. You must be practical."

And with that her hands that had been lifted so prayerfully shot out and grabbed two of the foremost hoppers. The others darted away. They noticed that her "hands"—forepaws you might call them—were very claw-like.

"But look at the Clown," cried the young Ladybirds. "Isn't he funny?"

"Ah, the Harlequin Bug," said Madame Ladybird.

He was dressed in a striped suit of black, orange, and yellow. He looked very like a king's jester of the old stories.

"My dears, my dears! Why can't you be serious. Now when I was your age—" and out went Madame Mantia's hands again.

"Now, Miss Golden Eyes, tell your people that I belong to a very ancient and honorable family. In one country, in olden times, my ancestors were greatly respected because of their pious character."

At this point the bush on which they were standing began to shake. Queer tremors like earthquake shocks ran through the whole plant.

"Mercy on us!" cried Madame Mantia. "Is it the end of the world?"

The ground near by began to bulge and crack. I began to wonder if the person about whom Madame Mantia had asked might be coming to answer her embarrassing question in person.

The plant next door to us was torn violently out of the ground. Its roots burst out, and a great hole appeared beneath them.

"Oh, mercy on us!" shrieked the little Ladybirds, and were just about to open their wings to fly away, but curiosity held them with wings half spread. Something "thrilling" was evidently going to happen!

And when we meet again I'll tell you what happened, but first you shall hear of little Lady Golden Eyes and the Aphid Lions. You see, it was little Lady Golden Eyes who loaned me her wings for my trip through Bugland.—By Ethel Allen Murphy.

Germans Ask Second Helping to Medals

BERLIN, (By Mail)—Many returned German prisoners are applying to the military department for new Iron Crosses, saying the originals were taken from them by the Entente.

Old-Fashioned Dances Received With Open Arms

The jazz dances never seemed quite at home in America, anyhow. They were all right for the Vernon Castles, and the thin lads in the clothing advertisements, but the rest of us found it hard to synchronize the oscillations of our double chins with the undulatory movements of the jolly roll. And as for the ladies, they were always more danced against than dancing!—Cartoons Magazine.

Electrified
