

Commissions Are Open in Medical Corps of Army

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—There are 730 commissioned vacancies in the Medical Corps, United States Army, and for the purpose of filling them examinations of all eligible applicants will be held on March 15th next in the United States and its colonial possessions, including the Panama Canal zone, as well as in France, Germany and Siberia.

In a bulletin issued today by Major General William G. Haan, in charge of employment for soldiers, it is announced that the examinations will be open not only to persons who have had military service in the World War but also to civilians. The present law requires that applicants shall be citizens between the ages of 22 and 32 years, and that the original appointment be made in the grade of first lieutenant. Hitherto it has been required that an applicant shall have served at least a year as an interne in some post graduate hospital, but this condition is waived for those who have served satisfactorily as commissioned officers for a period of at least one year during the World War.

Applications for examination in this country must be addressed to the Surgeon General of the Army, Washington, D. C.

Federal Training Aid to Soldier

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Champ Carter, Private, First Class, Sanitary Squadron, of Colorado, Texas, one of hundreds of disabled veterans who have had the benefit of retraining offered by the Government, has just recently quit his training to take a position with the American Smelting & Refining Company in Pueblo, Colorado, at a big salary.

Carter was one of the boys who gave up his schooling in chemistry and enlisted to help whip the Germans. In France, while on duty at A. E. F. Headquarters, Carter sustained an injury which, upon his arrival in this country, was classed as a seventy per cent disability. In spite of his weakened condition he immediately applied to the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

His former studies as a chemist and pharmacist give him the foundation for special training in chemistry in the plant of the American Smelting & Refining Company.

GREATER PAPER FAMINE IF FORESTS ARE WASTED

Survey of Pulp-Wood Resources Show Need for Restrictive and Permanent Policy

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In less than 20 years, 95 per cent of the pulp and paper mills of the country, mainly those in the east, will have practically exhausted their supplies of spruce, hemlock, and fir—the principal woods from which the paper on which newspapers are printed is made.

The annual cutting of these woods in the New England States and New York is approximately 23,562,000 cords, and at this rate the supply will last approximately 17 years. The estimated annual cutting in the Lake States is 3,630,000 cords, and if continued will exhaust the supply in that region within 18 years. Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina with their smaller forest resources, are even worse off, the annual cutting being calculated at 1,470,000 cords, at which rate the spruce, hemlock, and fir will last but ten years. Only in Alaska, Washington, Oregon, and California, are the reserves in no immediate danger of exhaustion if the cutting continues at the present rate of 2,218,000 cords a year.

These figures, of special interest because of the present paper shortage, are included in estimates compiled by the Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture. The data accumulated give additional emphasis to the demand for a nationwide policy that will put privately owned forests on a permanently productive basis and will also result in utilizing mill waste for paper making.

One Time When All Are Alike In This Country

The leading Democrat of the community was explaining to a woman organizer of his party why he didn't want his daughters to take an interest actively, in politics.

"My girls belong to the church," he said solemnly. "Of course in the church everybody is just alike. They belong to the D. A. R., and of course you know they are all just alike."

The woman organizer looked as if she were not so sure of it, but he went on in the same even tones:

"They were very patriotic, my girls. They sold Liberty Bonds and they knit dozens of things for the soldiers and sailors. They went two or three times a week to the Red Cross, and the people they met were all alike. And they belong to one or two literary clubs—Shakespeare and—music and things—all alike you know." The organizer nodded appreciatively, being a club woman herself.

"And they belong to a tennis club and a whist club," he added. "They have been very carefully brought up among people who were—" "All alike," the woman finished quickly. "By this time it must be getting a little dull—don't you think?—spending all their lives with people who are all alike? Don't you imagine it would be interesting to meet some other people, who were not just alike, with whom they could discuss some of the great problems that must be solved very soon?"

"After all," she said, her hand on the doorknob, "as a good Democrat, don't you think it just possible that you have omitted the one place in this country where we are all alike?"

"I don't know what you mean," the Democrat said, a little stiffly.

"Not clubs—even Red Cross clubs," she said. "Not Literary Societies, not Ladies' Aid or missionary meetings or D. A. R. conventions or tennis tournaments, or whist clubs, or 'Five Hundred' parties, or dances or Chautauqua circles or rummage sales—we may be relatively alike at any of them, but there is only one day and one place where we are really all alike."

"And that is?" he said, his curiosity getting the better of him for the moment. "Election day and the polling place," she answered.
