Only Acreage Will Help

The Pacific coast states requires at least ten thousand acres set out to small fruits in the next four months.

The crop of small fruits for 1920 has undoubtedly been cut down from ten to thirty per cent by the January freeze.

Cold spells come at least once in six or eight years and must be anticipated with surplus acreage to meet shortage.

Contracting prices are high and growers can make no mistake in putting out strawberries, raspberries, blackberries.

In many communities new canneries are being built and the demand for the raw material will be greater than ever.

Of course, the canneries cannot take all the chances of marketing the manufactured product—growers must take some.

But it can be safely said that with an unlimited world market, the chances of big profits are all on the side of the grower for the next five years.

The heating properties of coal depend mainly upon the carbon content, the oxygen being usually of no value, because it is combined with hydrogen as water. In gas coals, however, the excess of hydrogen is a material factor in heat production.
