Reforming Legal Procedure.

In commenting upon the proposed reform in the court procedure the Medford Mail-Tribune offers the following criticism of the methods thus far proposed to bring about a change in existing conditions:

The legislature's idea of reform in legal procedure, evidently consists in creating new judges and raising their salaries. If bills now pending become laws, approximately $100,000 for each biennial period will be added to the taxpayers' burdens. No wonder people believe that the governor and his veto are good things.

A bill which the governor vetoed two years ago, which increased the salaries of all circuit judges to $4000 a year, has again passed and is up to the governor a second time.

Another bill increases the supreme bench by adding two new justices at $4500 a year, with $6000 additional clerk hire, which adds $30,000 to the biennial cost of government. There are bills providing for the creation of six new circuit judgeships, three of these in Multnomah county. The others create new circuits out of Polk, Yamhill and Lincoln counties for the new Twelfth district, Washington and Tillamook of the new Thirteenth, and Coos and Curry of the new Fourteenth. Then there is the effort to separate Jackson and Josephine counties into two circuits.

Bills are also pending to abolish district attorneys and create instead county attorneys, but while the legislators believe in large salaries for judges, they have a poor opinion of district attorneys, as the salaries provided run from $500 to $1500, the average being $800.

The bill abolishing county judges is a good one, but should provide good salaries for commissioners, who should be required to devote all their time to the work.

The Toll of the Auto.

The annual report of the National Highways Protective Society, just published, shows that 103 children were killed by automobiles last year in New York City.

The total number of automobile fatalities in the city for the year was 211. Horse-drawn vehicles killed 177 persons of whom 85 were children.

Commenting upon these figures Melvin T. Bender, chairman of the legislative committee of the New York State Automobile Association says:

"It will be noted that almost as many deaths were caused by horse-drawn vehicles as by automobiles. This is very remarkable when you consider the far greater number of automobiles in the city, especially on the central thoroughfares and in the residence districts where children are at play.

"Still more remarkable is the situation in view of the fact that the horse-driven vehicle is comparatively a slow-moving one. The automobile, fast-driven and greater by thousands in number is not, according to this report, markedly more dangerous. If speed is the great automobile fault, as some emphatically assert, then the automobile should appear many times, rather than only 17 per cent more dangerous.

"The fact of the matter is that the automobile while faster driven is more carefully driven, more carefully driven, more quickly controllable, and is equipped by the law with a warning signal.

"The drunken or reckless driver of either vehicle is equally dangerous and equally a public enemy. But I think you will find that among motorists a far greater proportion than among horse-drivers have their vehicles always under good control and absolutely subordinated to traffic conditions.

"Even so, however, the number of automobile fatalities is shockingly great. It should and can be reduced. One way is to secure still more careful driving through a more rigid examination for licenses. Equal, if not greater in importance, is the necessity of an adequate warning signal, one that roller-skating children will always hear and obey—in time. The law should compel the proper use of such a signal."

A Real Hero.

"Had we lived I should have had a tale to tell of the hardihood, the endurance and the courage of my companions which would have stirred the heart of every Englishman. These tough notes and our dead bodies must tell the tale. But surely, surely, a great and rich country like ours will see that those who are dependent upon us are properly provided for."

These were the closing words of the farewell message of Captain Robert F. Scott. Thus did the notable British officer pay tribute to his companions who had sacrificed their lives in the search for the pole.

The first thought of Scott was his men—of those who had been faithful and loyal to him and to the great project which they had jointly undertaken. He spoke not of the courage of Scott, but of the heroism of his companions. It was not the hope of personal glory or thought of personal gain which induced him to brave the perils of the polar climate. It was patriotism. It was because of loyalty to the British nation and because any success which might come as a result of his labors would be considered a national triumph.

Compare the generous sentiments of Scott with the intemperate statements credited to Commander Peary.

No eulogy was given his companions by Peary. With him it was not a great national triumph. It was a personal victory. His companions were given only casual mention. He insisted that they should be content to bask in the reflected glory of the commanding officer. They were mere incidents of the trip the same as the dogs that carried him across the icy lands of the north.

When his claim as the first discoverer of the pole was disputed, he assailed the character of his rival. He was one of the first to call him an impostor. He could not divide the honor with any human soul even though it happened to be an American citizen.

England may well feel proud of Captain Scott. America may well regret that Peary did not possess some of the same noble traits of character.

ORVILLE

Monday, February 16th, was a red letter day in the history of Corvallis. The carpenter gang on the new bridge went to work at an early hour. Capt. Brown of the ferryboat was busy as many of the people of the little burg were wanting to take the last trip on the old rub and several Linn county farmers drove to the bridge on each side to hear the order to move onto the bridge.

The first wagon from the west contained John Beach and Geo. Smith, county coroner of Benton county, and the first team from Linn county was that of Charles Beach.

The city people were well represented by the small kids of all sizes from three years old to the men and women of 80.

Among the men with smiling faces we met on the streets of Corvallis were Mr. W. E. Smith of the Republican. He was awfully busy and has a large force of hands all of whom were busy too.

Mr. DuBrulle was running the line-type, and Miss Ina Chesley was taking notes from the telephone.

The next place we called at was the large department store of Walter Klime and found him and his 28 clerks all busy. Mr. Klime had his coat off.

The next place was the drug store on the corner of Jefferson and Second. Mr. Hartsock was awfully busy mixing pills, but was well pleased to note the new bridge is completed, but the boy scouts were all out on the bridge so the shooting holes in the old ferry will be postponed till some future time.

Captain Brown is now employed on the bridge to turn the span when the steamboats go through, and he is supposed to walk back and forth through the bridge with every team to slow the driver how fast to drive on the new structure.

LINN COUNTY FARMER HAS FIRST AUTO PLOW IN VALLEY

Modern Piece of Machinery Is Unloaded Here Today for J.C. Tammen, the Owner.

That Linn county farmers are progressive and keeping abreast with the times was indicated today when an auto plow—and it undoubtedly will too—was unloaded at the Southern Pacific freight depot at this city for J. C. Tammen, a prosperous farmer residing about seven miles southwest of Albany who will use this modern and up-to-date invention in breaking the ground on his big farm.

The plow which was sent to Albany on a flat car, attracted much attention at the depot this morning. The plow resembles an automobile in many respects, having a steering wheel, brakes, gears, and other bits of mechanism similar to the modern motor car.

The plow weighs several tons and is equipped with a seat for the driver. There are six wheels on the plow, a guide wheel in front and one in the rear, one large wide one on each side and in the center, and two extra wheels which can be easily attached. The engine is 40 H. P. but can develop more than this. The plow is the Hackney Auto Plow and undoubtedly cost several thousand dollars.

The unique and modern piece of machinery is probably the first auto plow to be placed in use in this part of the state and promises to eventually take the place of the horse plows altogether.
