An Evil Prophet.

Writing in the Louisville Courier-Journal, Henry Watterson says: "Of the new secretary of state it is not necessary here to speak. The Courier-Journal has fully expressed itself on Mr. Bryan's assumption of that portfolio and awaits with interest the consequences."

While in the prime of life Henry Watterson earned for himself the distinction of being the greatest editorial writer on the American continent. In latter days he has earned another, and less worthy distinction-that of being the greatest prophet of evil.

William J. Bryan. The common people, for whom Mr. Bryan has done more than any other living American, will require more convincing evidence than the mere personal opinion of the editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, before accusing President Wilson of making a blunder in the choice of his secretary of state.

For the learning and diction of Henry Watterson, the Democrat entertains a high regard, but for his political judgment and democracy we have no respect.

The "Seattle Spirit."

It is the "Scattle spirit" that has made the metropolis of Washington, a city of first rank blooded stock and he will make a failure. Place an energetic and optimistic man on the same farm and he will become independent the ballots. and he will become independent.

The same illustration may be applied to any city or town in Oregon. You can't build a city on pessiunism. There was a time when it could be done but those days are an ancient and forgotten memory.

THE INHUMANITY OF MAN.

When Henry W Grady was best.

When Henry W. Grady was besttating whether to remain on a New York paper or to return to Georgia, he decided to go home because no body in the apartment in which lie lived could tell him about the laby whose little whose collin was carried side by side with him down the steps of the albining apartment. The in humanity of cites' overwhelmed him.
How many of its have had a similar experience?

How many of as have had a similar experience?

In one of the large apartment houses in which I have lived on the West Side, said John Temple Graves, my front door when it swung open touched the front door of my next neighbor, divided from me only by a thin wall of less than half a foot. One morning on going out I met a pleas anti-faced man emerging from this door. We exchanged the casual salutation of inusemates. This we repeated on several subsequent occasions in a casual way. I never knew his name.

law of life and every creed of Christianity was my neighbor—my nearest neighbor. I could almost hear him hreathe at night through the intervening wall.

And yet, he had sickened, he had suffered, he had gone through the agony or travail of death. He had heen carried out in his midnight casket to the grave and his family had come back to the angunsh and desolation of an unspeakable hereavement.

And I who was "this man's neighbor" had neither ministered to his suffering in life, stood by him in the hour and article of death, nor comforted the crowning sorrow of those who came back to his broken and desolate home—just within a foot of the who came back to his broken and desolate home-just within a foot of the light and love and laughter of my own-because in the rush of our big world I did not know.

I have never gotten over that incident. I never will. Something ought to be done about it. If something could be done.

We pay a fierce price for the joy of cities. Too many people make any one person unimportant. Great crowds dwarf and minify individuals. In the multitude we forget each other too often in life and in death.

When a man dies among two or three in a little community, it is a tragedy. It darkens the sky, it shadows the spirit, it bows the head in reverence and humility and sympa-tragedy. It darkens the sky, it shadows the spirit, it bows the head in reverence and humility and sympathy.

But when one dies among five millions, the little gap made by the passing of the atom closes up so quickly from the mighty mass that it is difficult to remember that the atom ever lived or even died.

From which I came to say that the cities are not much of a place for old people or people who die. They should find a softer and simpler life and a quieter place in which to enact the last great tragedy of life, which is death.

Selecting Postmasters.

It will take more than the pen of Henry Watterson to discredit William I. Bryan. The common of Nebraska are as follows:

When there is agreement among leading democrats, especially the local democratic committee and club, and the chairman of the county central committee, who is supposed to speak for its membership, upon a candidate for postmaster. I shall consider it my duty to accept such industriement as final, and recommend such a candidate to the president for appointment.

appointment.
If on the other hand the local dem-If on the other hand the local democratic committee, the democratic club, and the county committee cannot agree upon a candidate, they could, if they choise, leave the selection to a vote of the people, limiting the fillings as candidates to democrats. I would consider it a moral obligation to recommend the candidate who receives the plurality of votes at such an election. Such an election should be conducted according to the following rules:

1. Filings for nomination as post-master to be made with the chairman of the local democratic committee and only things of men well known as democrats to be accepted, and these candidates to be approved as such by the chairman of the democratic coun-ty central committee.

on the Pacific coast.

Nine out of every ten municipalities which go down in history as over-grown country towns, lack only the proper initiative to make them prosperous cities.

Put a lazy and indolent man on 160 acres of fertile ground, give him the latest and most improved farm implements and plenty of blooded stock and he will make a confliction for the beard democratic committees and the charman of the beard democratic committees afficient to pay for the committee sufficient to pay for the committee afficient to pay for the committee of the election beard to have charge of the election beard to have charge of the election, and the charman of the beard.

In a copy of the Enterprise, the lo-cal paper at Riverside, Calif., under date of March 21, appears an account of a serious accident which befell George Martin, a former resident of George Martin, a former resident of this city.

The article is in part:

"George Martin, owner of a large allalfa farm in the Perris valley, and A. J. Charle, local agent for the Paige car, are receiving medical treatment today for broken bones and painful bruises sustained last night in an auto accellent on the road between Perris and Ethanic. The machine turned turtle, pinning the two men beneath it. The auto ran from the roadway into a ditch paralleling it and capsized.

it. The auto ran from the roadway into a ditch paralleling it and capsized.

Mr. Martin suffered the most serious injuries, one leg being broken and his face cut.

The bone is fractured in several places. The wound begins at the shigh and extends downward. More than one X-ray photo was required to show the entire injury. The injured man was taken to the county hospital, where he wil remain until convalescent. Mr. Charle was badly bruised, but not seriously hurt. He was confined to his bed today.

The automobilists were in imminent danger of burning to death. The engine continued running throughout the occurrence, threatening every moment to ignite the escaping gasoline. Another party of motorists rescued the imprisoned men from the impending explosion.

Mr. Martin came to Riverside from Albany, Ore., last December, and has since resided at Hotel Tetley. He has extensive property interests in the Perris valley. He was accompanied to Southern California by his wife. Mrs. Martin will care for her husband during his stay at the hospital."

"As the two men were journeying loward Riverside at an early hour last evening the wind blew Mr. Martin's hat off. It struck Mr. Charle in the face. When the driver grabbed at the flying head gear he lost control of the wheel and the machine went into the ditch wrong side up."
