STORY ON TOM M'EWEN.

Promised to Bring Back a Pair of Elephants From Philadelphia.

Now that Tom McEwen has allowed some designing men to trade on his personal popularity, by putting him up for mayor to serve their selfish purposes, a good story on that gentleman is being revived and told on the curb, to illustrate Mr. McEwen's predominating characteristic, that utter inability of his to refuse any request made of him. This is the way the story goes.

Last spring a gentleman wanted to buy a horse and, of course, went to Tom McEwen to make the purchase. There was none in the stables to suit him and Tom promptly volunteered to get the animal designed especially for this man. The horse was over in John Day valley and he would have him here in a few days. In less than a week the gentleman called at the stables to enquire if his horse had arrived, but was put off with a plausible excuse for its non-arrival. This kind of business went on for more than a month. Finally the two met on the street one day and Mr. McEwen said: "Well that horse of yours will be in some time tonight. I'm having eighty head driven in from John Day, and thought I would wait and bring yours in with the lot. He's a beauty, and don't you forget it."

Next morning, bright and early, the gentleman went to the stables and asked to see his horse. The man in charge didn't understand and asked for an explanation. Receiving it, he remarked:

"Hell, Tom has bought no horses over there recently. If you had wanted an elephant, he would have promised to get you one."

Just then Mr. McEwen came in and the speaker continued: "Tom, Mr. Blank is going around getting up a subscription for a city park. He thinks if we could get an elephant for the children to play with, it would be a pretty good idea."

"Just the thing," remarked the ever willing gentleman. "I have been thinking about that very thing. I'm going to Philadelphia this summer and will bring back a pair."

On the Eve of Another Boom.

We are apparently at the beginning of another boom period. The reaction from the quiet which has prevailed in business for several months was first manifested in the speculative markets, which respond most quickly to current conditions. General business has followed the lead, however, and all sorts of new constructions and other projects are coming forward, while the railroads are preparing for a period of heavy traffic. It looks as if a great deal of money is going to be put into new enterprises and the enlargement of old ones during the coming year. There is, as in all such periods, a danger of too much booming, and overdoing the advance; but that is apparently inseparable from such periods, and cautious business men will make the necessary allowances to provide for it. There is every indication that the mining industry will have its full share in the new expansion. A growing disposition to invest in mining enterprise has been shown of late, and much of the surplus capital now looking for investment will probably be put into mines of various kinds. The manufacturer who expects to furnish machinery and supplies for the new mining developments, which are soon to be in progress, should remember that the beginning of a period of expansion is the time to put themselves prominently before buyers, and thus secure their share of the new work.—Engineering and Mining Review.

"The Portland," conducted by Gus Woodward on Mill street, continues to merit the name of the popular gentlemen's resort of Sumpter.

GOOD NEWS FROM SEVEN DEVILS.

Great Activity Reported From the Copper Camps Over There.

W. D. Lovejoy, the well known lawyer of Salubria, is in the city, and brings good news from the Seven Devils country, where he states there is unwonted activity. The company, headed by W. B. McDougall, of California, who recently took over the "Creek Joe" properties about a mile below Ballard's Landing, is doing a great deal of development, both in mining and building, they now being engaged in repairing old buildings and putting up new, and preparing generally for very extensive development work.

Haas brothers, of Weiser, owners of the River Queen mine, are preparing for sinking this winter. This is one of the best properties of the Devils country, where they have extremely high-grade ore, and where but little sinking has been done, though great depth can be found quickly because of the lay of the country. They will sink in a large shoot of very rich material, in which they have been drifting for some months, getting out so much ore that all the facilities for storing it have been utilized.

At the Iron Dyke they are making large improvements and the employment of a much larger force of men this winter than ever before. They have not yet begun the erection of their matting plant, but this will doubtless be put up early in the spring, as there is a large quantity of ore already extracted and ready for reduction.

Mr. Lovejoy says there is a good feeling throughout that entire section and that an important project is on for the famous Heath district, though it could not be mentioned at that time, because it is not completely closed up.—Statesman.
