

MINE RUN BY MEDIUM.

Money Spent Under Direction of a Spiritualist.

A press dispatch from Nelson, British Columbia, says that consultation with mediums by prospectors who have a leaning towards the occult is common enough to excite little or no curiosity, but the spectacle of a big property operated on plans laid down by a medium is unique.

Such a spectacle is afforded by the King Solomon, on Woodbury creek, about 30 miles from this city.

Up to the present time the spirits which animate the medium seem to have fallen down in their reading of the ground, for it is patent to all who are familiar with the situation that the company is not getting enough ore to make scarf pins for the management.

The King Solomon Mining company, which should not be confused with the King Solomon property at Ainsworth, operated by Dr. Wingate, of Spokane, controls 2000 acres of mineral land, extending from Kootenay lake for six miles up Woodbury creek.

The camp is located a few hundred yards from the lake shore and is thoroughly equipped with offices, a hotel, assay plant, concentrator, wharf and other features required to put the property on a paying basis. The workings are also confined to this section of the company's holdings.

The president of the company is a man named Townsend, a wealthy Lima, Ohio, man, handsome and thoroughly business-like in appearance. His sister, Miss Townsend, is the medium on whose divinations the property is worked.

The president says he has made every cent he has made through following his sister's advice, and he has implicit faith in her spirit messages. It is stated that the Rockefeller interests have a share in the proposition, but this is mere report.

The balance of information concerning the King Solomon is obtained from men working on the group. They state that the medium will lay out certain work, and without further consideration the crew goes to work.

For months they have been tunneling first in one direction, now in another, sometimes under the bed of the creek, but ever in country rock. Not a sign of mineral has been encountered outside of one shoot, which was worked when the property was first opened.

The big concentrator is ready to treat the ore, but the mineral has yet to be found, and the miners who work on the property are sceptical as to the outcome. President Townsend appears to have an abundance of funds and to be willing to back the spirits in the search for mineral.

The miners are well treated and never find fault with the management, although many of them become dissatisfied with the bootless quest and go down the hill. At Ainsworth, the nearest camp of any size, the situation is regarded as amusing, and "spirit leads" have become more or less of a joke. The company has easily spent $20,000 outside of the purchase price of the claims and the cost of buildings and plant, which probably represents an investment of well on to $100,000.

Recently four or five of the crew quit work in a bunch, and this gave rise to a report that the property had been shut down. Investigation disclosed the fact that the report was incorrect, and that operations are still under way with a crew of 12 or 14 men.
