HOW THAT RICH LEDGE WAS FOUND

WHILE GOLD ROCK WAS TURNED OVER

ledge has been traced for a distance for the benefit, improvement and hillside and fully $400,000 is now in sight. The Briggs family is preparing to put up a stamp mill on the proprety in order to turn the gold state of Oregon. into bullion in the shortest possible time.

Briggs was out bunting deer and tried to get his dog to take a deer trail. The dog refused to do so, and young Briggs, becoming angry, beat the capine in order to make him do better. While scurrying about the hillside a rusty-looking rock was turned over and on its under side the gold glittered in such a way as to interfere with the dog-whipping deer was also considere I of secondary the undersigned as by law provided. importance, as young Briggs knew he had thousands of dollars in sight.

"At the present the bills around the head of Sucker creek are alive with prospectors," Mr. Kramer said, "and I look for more big discoveries before the summer is over. The region is high up in the Siskiyous, within a few rods of the California line, and the prospecting will be a pleasent outing for bundreds, even should they not succeed in fluding anything.

"In the old days of mining, forty years ago, a great deal of golddust was taken out of Sucker and Althouse creeks, by miners who were not looking for ledges. This golddust, however, came from just such mother lodes as the one found by young Briggs and there must be several of these yet to uncover. "-Telegram.
