"Soldier Letters"

Verne Sandberg is still at the Bremerton Navy Yard, where he is in the naval service. He likes his work very well, but does not know how long he will remain at Bremerton.

Ed. White is still at Kelly Field, Texas.—He writes of meeting Lieut. Jas. A. Miller again. He makes many inquiries about the home boys who have gone into the service since he left, and writes a fine "family" letter.

Paul Blaschke at Camp Mills, Long Island, N. Y., writes his father that he is still in quarantine—that those Eastern thunder storms are still daily events—(which the Oregon boys put in the same class with the Kaiser and the devil).

Clarence Hickok wrote July 19 to his brother here that he had just been to Paris. He declares the German reports of the wrecking and partial abandoning of Paris is pure fiction. That Paris is still the gayest city in the world, practically normal and uninjured by the Boche shells and bombs.

Fred Ehlen adopted a sharp method of telling his father his location, by referring to a short trip that it would require to visit the grave of a great French Composer with whose music his father is very familiar, this composer having written the finest waltzes in the world. His grave is in Alsace, where he was born.

Will Keil, writing enroute east (on the road to somewhere) August 14, to his parents Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Keil says: "We are on our way to our next camp. Right now we are passing through the mountains between Utah and Colorado. The scenery is just wonderful. This morning we passed through the salt desert where they were scooping the salt up with a steam shovel to load it on to cars to ship to the cleaners and dryers. After passing through the desert, we stopped at Great Salt Lake where we all took a swim, and had a lot of fun. Just as we came into Salt Lake City it began to rain—the first I have seen since I left home. The nicest country I've seen was just after leaving Salt Lake City which was beautiful. I never enjoyed myself so much as right now. These trips are worth everything to me. I am in the best of health and feeling fine."

Clarence Hickok writing from France
