Just a Reminder

No man can be zealously affected in the interests of the church without having his whole philanthropic spirit enlarged and ennobled, so that he may become a builder of cities as well as a builder of churches. It should be remembered that he who builds a church really helps to build the town in which it is located. A synagogue or temple or church is not to be looked upon in its singularity, as if it were so many walls, with so many doors and windows; a church is a representative institution, through which should flow rivers that will fertilize all the districts of the city,—rivers of knowledge, rivers of charity, rivers of brotherhood, rivers of co-operation, so that men should turn to the church, assured that every rational and healthy expectation would be satisfied by its provisions. When you earnestly consider all these things, can you afford to regard the church with indifference?

Wm. Schoeler.
