Exclusion of Infected Cows Promised Oregon Breeders

A regulation to protect Oregon dairymen from tuberculosis infected California dairy animals will be passed by the state livestock sanitary board, Dr. W. H. Lytle, state veterinarian, assured county agents and members of the college dairy department staff in conference. That the federal government will also take action against interstate shipment of untested cattle was the assertion made by Dr. Sam B. Foster, in charge of tuberculosis eradication work in Oregon for the United States bureau of animal husbandry.

"We will pass a regulation that nothing but cattle from accredited herds can be brought into Oregon from California," said Dr. Lytle. "That will amount to a virtual quarantine because there are very few such herds in that state."

"There is now on the statutes a law that prohibits shipping cattle from one state to another unless they have been tested for disease," explained Dr. Foster. "Give us information that will stand in the courts and we will place it in the hands of the United States district attorneys, who are directed under the law to proceed against violators."

Oregon dairymen are making a determined effort to stamp out tuberculosis and are demanding protection from animals shipped in from California, reported the county agents. Of 128,000 animals tested in Oregon by federal and state veterinarians in the last two years, less than 1 per cent reacted. In Klamath and Josephine counties, where 5000 head have recently been tested, most of the 5 per cent reactors were found to have been imported from California.
