Did Moliere Wear Iron Mask?

M. Loquin, a former president of the Academie de Bordeaux, holds that the man in the iron mask was none other than Moliere, whose disappearance the Jesuits were supposed to have urged the king to compass after the great triumph of "Tartuffe."

"Moliere," says this learned man, "died February 17, 1673; the captivity of the man in the iron mask lasted 31 years, from February, 1673, to November, 1703."

The significant silence that prevailed once Moliere was regarded as dead and buried, the foul slanders that were spread abroad shortly afterward and, finally, the destruction of all Moliere's posthumous works and the strange disappearance of every single line of his writing point to a sinister object.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Novels in a Nutshell

Much has been written in criticism of English, French and Russian novels, but never have their essential natures been so crisply described as in these paragraphs of anonymous origin:

An English novel is a book in which two people want each other in the first chapter, but do not get each other until the last chapter.

A French novel is a book in which two people get each other right in the first chapter and from then on to the last chapter don't want each other any more.

A Russian novel is one in which two people neither want each other nor get each other, and round that fact 450 profoundly melancholy pages are written.—Youth's Companion.

A New Service Feature for your convenience

You can now obtain stopover privileges in 15-day roundtrip tickets between practically all stations in Oregon which are served by Southern Pacific Lines. This is a new service which means much to you in added convenience.

In addition, special week-end roundtrip tickets from all stations to Portland are on sale Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays, the final return limit being the following Tuesday.

And, of course, you know how much less it costs to travel on Southern Pacific trains than it does to go in any other way.

Yet these trains provide a convenient, regular and comfortable service which is of great value to all passengers.

Ask our agent for full information relative to any phase of our service. He, like all Southern Pacific men, is anxious to assist you in any possible way.
