WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON CHILD HEALTH AND PROTECTION

(Oregon State Board of Health in cooperation with United States Public Health Service, Frederick D. Striker, M. D., collaborating epidemiologist.)

President Hoover, following the example set by President Roosevelt in 1909, has organized a national conference on Child Health and Protection, which will meet in Washington, D. C., on November 19 to 22, 1930. Representatives of organized health and child welfare work from every state have been invited to participate. It is Mr. Hoover's belief that since the future welfare of our country depends upon the health and welfare of our children, there should be a common understanding of the principles and practices which have been found to give the best results in the fields of health education, and child protection.

For over a year the members of the conference have engaged in this study so that when they come together in November they will have a full understanding of what the American people are doing for their children, of their accomplishments and of their failures. The conference will attempt to outline a course to be followed in order to assure every child the opportunity to attain his best physical, mental, and spiritual development and serve to the limits of his capacity, his country and his generation.

The Oregon State Board of Health is interested primarily in the health of the child and for this reason is authorizing the executive secretary, Dr. Frederick D. Striker, to attend the conference as a delegate. The State Board of Health is particularly interested in the maintenance of the full-time principle in health work. The State of Oregon can not expect outside assistance in its health program unless funds are provided so that the Board of Health can co-operate in the national program.

On November 19, at 9:00 p. m. President Hoover's address at the opening of the conference will be broadcast. Everyone who has the interest of our country or of the children at heart should listen and hear what the President has to say on this subject—a subject even more important than law enforcement, foreign relations, naval reduction or any other of the major topics which attract and hold our interest. If the welfare of our children be neglected no national topic is important. It is only in relation to the future that any matter of current interest is vital, and the future lies with our children and our children's children.

NATIONAL FOREST AS LOCAL PLAYGROUNDS

Nearly three million visitors spent some time on the 22 national forests of Oregon and Washington in 1930, according to a report just issued by the regional forester, Portland, Oregon. The fourteen national forests of Oregon attracted 1,627,380 visitors, while the eight national forests of Washington had 1,253,120. The 1930 figures show a small increase of 5,820 above 1929 totals.

That the Pacific Northwest is "on wheels" is indicated by the fact that 2,591,330 of these forest visitors came by automobile. Railroads and stage lines brought 247,625 of them. There were 26,600 hikers, an increase over the 1929 number. The remaining 14,940 came by horse or other means of transportation. The figures for visitors and guests at resorts shows a decided increase in 1930 over 1929, this figure for 1929 being 39,807 while 1930 shows 54,608. Campers dropped from 302,300 in 1929 to 296,160 in 1930, a decrease of 6,140; showing, forest officers believe, that the outdoor public wants more forest comforts than heretofore.

There were 309,221 picnickers, an increase of over 2,000, while the number of transient motorists dropped from 2,100,806 to 1,991,475 this year. This figure for transient motorists does not include the estimated number of motorists over the Columbia River highway. Hotels and resorts within the forests entertained 229,228 of the visitors, while 54,608 of them either had special use permits for cabins or were guests of summer homesitters.

The Mount Hood national forest in Oregon leads all forests with 700,757 visitors, or 95,355 less than in 1929; the Wenatchee national forest in Washington is second with 510,000 and the Snoqualmie national forest is third with 359,265, these two Washington forests showing increases for 1930.

The forest service considers outdoor recreation one of the major assets of the national forests. Forest officials state that recreational use is encouraged and developed as rapidly as funds permit and the public good demands. It is encouraging to note that some of the railroads are now advertising the recreational attractions of certain portions of the Northwest's national forests, forest officers state.

Approximately 2,743,000,000 telephone calls were completed last year over the 1,930,000 telephones on the Pacific coast.
