EARLY HISTORY OF ALOHA

Interesting Narrative of The Early Settlement of This Community

WOLFF CAME IN 1892

town was Named from the Song Aloha; First Train Stopped Here in 1907

E. A. Wolff was one of the earliest settlers in Aloha. Mr. and Mrs. Wolff and eight children arrived in Portland in 1892 with only "two bits" and a sack of corn meal. In the fall they bought land in what is now Aloha. Mr. Wolff was a cigar maker and to save car fare he walked to and from his work in Portland every day over the cordwood road, now known as the Canyon Creek Road. The factory was located where Meier & Franks Store now stands.

At that time R. Rasmussen, Ira Wheeler, D. R. Wheeler and R. Gradehand were living here. Mr. Wolff bought his place from D. R. Wheeler.

The townsite was all brush and heavy timber, but people were beginning to clear up their land and all along the railroad to Hillsboro, were miles and miles of cord wood. Reedville was the nearest stopping point for the trains and it took years of fighting to force steam trains to stop at Aloha. Even after the station was established the train crew did not like to make so many stops and would forget to leave bread and mail and day after day men would have to tramp to Reedville to get their "daily bread." The first train stopped here in 1907.

B. N. Sprout made over the Charley Casper house in 1900 into what was then a "big" house. C. J. Oglesby received 32 acres in the heart of Aloha for grubbing 32 acres for D. R. Wheeler. He certainly earned it for it took him 7 years to clear up this land. The Shaw Fear Co. bought Oglesby out for $200 an acre.

In 1890 A. H. Johnson and his partner, E. Perkins, bought 1300 acres and bought and sold cattle. Johnson became discouraged and shot himself. Mr. Perkins sold out his interest and went to Portland and built the Perkins hotel. He erected a gold bull on the top of the Hotel building and it is there today. He afterwards became a millionaire. He and his wife wanted to visit Europe and see friends and relatives so he left the hotel in the hands of his sons and took the train for New York. When they boarded the ship their sons were there also. They had left the hotel in the hands of a friend. They wanted to see Europe too.

The Perkins had a lovely country home at Aloha for years, equipped with every convenience.

Children attended the Reedville school and had to walk except in bad weather when the parents would sometimes drive over and bring them home.

School was started in the Oglesby house and continued until the house burned down when the present school house was built. There were only two trains a day. Teachers came out at 7:30 a. m.

S. N. Buck moved here in 1908 and started a small store, he had already a sawmill at Huber, which used to be called Perkins crossing.

In 1897 Mr. Wolff tired of working in Portland and started a factory of his own in the second story of the Gradehand house and took the cigars to Portland and sold them.

The Wolff family still have the sign which reads, "Tobacco Factory, permit No. 107." The house was later sold to A. Lister, who moved the house to the corner of Tobias and the old Hillsboro road. Mrs. A. Gray now occupies the house.

A. E. Wolff died in 1922. D. R. Wheeler built the warehouse where the late John Schilling's conducted a grain and feed store. Later he built the store where the Aloha Mercantile Store was located.

FASHION MAKES GAS HEATERS WORK

The present vogue of light colored stockings, fabric gloves and delicate scarves is resulting in a material increase in the use of gas, because of the greater consumption of hot water, according to a report of the American Gas Association.

Gas-fired water heaters are used in more than half of the homes in all towns of 1,000,000 or more in the United States, and it is these heaters which are working overtime to keep up the water supply.

The modern business woman, it is said, changes her light colored stockings at least twice a day, and often, when it rains. Washable gloves are frequently changed twice a day. These feminine items, says the report, are washed at home, usually every other night, and these frequent washings have produced a record consumption of hot water, clearly reflected in Gas utility company records.
