"Just Try It"

What is that my dear friend? You are tired you say? You just like to rest in your bed for a day? Just lie and relax in great comfort; but say: Have you tried it?

Better make it a week, I pray you just do, How the days lengthen out and the hours seem not few. At the end of a week I feel certain that you; Will be glad to get up. But just try it.

Decide to try two, when the first week is over. Having nothing to do, one is surely in clover. When evening comes on, round your brain will hover Visions of out door. Better try it.

Kind neighbors come in with some real tempting food, And you thank them; or at least you know that you should. And they tell you the news and make you wish that you could join in all the fun. But just try it.

You read everything that your brain can devour. Every morning you awake at a very small hour. 'Twould be nice to go out and pick just one flower That grows in your yard. But just try it.

When two weeks have passed and on starting the third To say that you're tired sounds rather absurd. But to say you are rested, I declare, on my word Isn't true. But just try it.

Just Like a Man

My husband and I are no longer on speaking terms. At least my husband does not speak to me, and I just can't understand why.

Of course I don't want him to interrupt or answer back, and I always aim to start a conversation, and am still "Daughter of Eve" enough to want the last word. But I do want him to at least look interested.

I can't see how he can blame me because the baby borrowed his hair brush to use on his dog. The little darling did look too cute, with a big brush in either hand as he said, "Now doggie hold still, and baby make nice pompadore." I just couldn't spoil his fun, and if that big brute of a husband loved him he couldn't either.

But then I don't think hubby loves even the baby after what happened the other day. You see it was like this. Baby wanted to make his dog pretty, so he borrowed his daddy's hair brushes. perfectly natural thing to do. Who should baby expect to borrow from if not his father?

When I saw baby making his doggie's pompadore I did wish his daddy could see him; for he was just too cute for words.

Well just then Mrs. Kane next door called over the back fence. "The new neighbors beyond us are moving in." "Come over and see what shabby furniture they have." Naturally I was anxious to see if this new woman was the kind we could care to call on. You can tell just what kind of people they are by the things they have, and it is a lot easier to get a look while they are moving in than to be bothered to call; or have to run in some morning to borrow something.

Well, we, Mrs. Kane and I decided right there. We will not call on this new woman; and we also further more will not invite her to join our club.

Such a mess. College professor indeed! You think he would buy some new books. If he wants to furnish his home with books, why not get some with bright covers. Those shades that blend so well with the new drapes they are using this year. Some of their books look years and years old, and I'll bet there isn't a late fiction in the lot.

Well when I got home baby had left the dog and was playing with the boy next door, and the dog was chewing something black. I think now it must have been one of hubby's brushes, but as the bristles were all out of it why should I spoil the dog's fun. There was no use trying to save it then. And besides, didn't I have enough to do cleaning up the mess that dog and baby made?

Hubby is short and fat, and though he has tried every hair tonic his barber has recommended, for the last ten years his hair has been getting thinner and thinner; until now streaks of white show between the hairs. Funny how white the scalp gets when the hair falls out.

Well that evening when hubby came home he immediately went to the bath room, and started in to apply tonic. He rubbed it forward. He rubbed it backward. He rubbed it sidewise, and then he rubbed it with a circular motion. Until instead of white, the skin that showed through was the color of cheese. Can you blame me for thinking the moon was coming up when he came into the kitchen?

I soon discovered something was wrong. Hubby was so excited and demanded to know what has happened to his hair brushes, and when I told him of the cute thing the baby had done, instead of appreciating his child as any father should, he got mad and started talking about a hard working man trying to get ahead in the world, and that he would have to spend ten dollars for a new pair of brushes.

Now I believe in any wife being economical and being able to rise to the occasion, as it were. Ten dollars is a lot of money. I thought of the afternoon bridge I'd planned, and figured ten dollars would just about buy the prizes. I knew Kate Murphy had spent eight dollars when she had the girls at her house, and of course I wanted to go her one better.

I did want to help Hubby save that ten dollars. And I did want to help him find the temper he seemed to have lost. So quick as a flash, I flew up stairs to my chest, where I keep all my nice embroidered things. Things I made before I was married, and taking out one of the lovely bath towels mother gave me, I handed it to hubby, and asked him to try using it instead of a hair brush. He threw it on the floor, and saying something real loud about not being one bit ball-headed; he rushed out of the front door and didn't even come home to dinner.

All this happened three days ago, and I just know Hubby doesn't love me, or Baby, or Doggie any more. Isn't that just like a man?

Deceased is survived by one sister, Mrs. Fannie Hays of Chicago. She was a direct descendant of the famous British author, H. Rider Haggard. Other surviving relatives of note are Dr. W. D. Haggard of Nashville, Tennessee, past president of the American Medical association and Walter Hayden for some years mayor of Greeley, Colo. and who visited her last year.

The funeral services were held Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the Tualatin Methodist Community church and the committal was in Winona cemetery. W. E. Pegg of Beaverton in charge.

FARM MARKET REPORT

Grain

Good milling demand and advancing prices at Winnipeg and Liverpool caused a firm market for wheat and rye last week. The quality of wheat offered is an important factor in the market owing to damage in Canada and in Europe and the strong domestic demand for high protein spring wheat, hard winter grades. Premiums for hard, high protein wheat continued to increase but larger receipts at St. Louis caused reductions in premiums for soft winter. Corn went lower in increased crop estimates and oats followed, but barley was independently firm especially malting grades. Flax markets weakened on heavy receipts of indifferent quality.

Wool

The wool market continued to strengthen gradually.

Butter

Steady prices on high grades but weakening on the poorer kinds were noted last week in the San Francisco butter market. Eastern markets were down a cent then back again. On October 1 the storage holdings for the whole United States were 147,412,000 pounds or 22,070,000 more than a year earlier. Withdrawals from storage are heavier than last year at present. The outlook for production is considered favorable.

Livestock

In between grades of fed steers moved up at Chicago in sympathy with earlier advances of highly finished kinds which placed last week's fat cattle market at that point in line with the season's highest which is the highest since war days. Rather liberal offerings of unfinished cattle appeared in western markets. Hogs were arriving in less volume with stocks cleared in better shape than at any time during the season causing a firm situation and some price advance. Both fat and feed lambs advanced in principal markets.

Feeds

Heavy production of wheat feeds, good pasturage conditions and lower prices for corn and oats were weakening factors in the feed market but lined meal, cottonseed meal, gluten and hominy feed and alfalfa meal were little changed in most of the markets.

Seeds

Most of the meadow fescue seed crop has been sold by the growers although prices in Kansas were reported on October 4 at 5 cents compared to 15 cents last year and 8 cents two years ago. Timothy is moving slowly from growers hands at variable prices although the average was about $2.60 a hundred pounds on October 4 compared to $1.40 a year ago, $6.80 in 1925 and $5.65 in 1924.

RECIPES

PUMPKIN PIES

Two eggs, 1 cup sugar, 4 cups milk, 1 teaspoon salt (level), 1 1/2 teaspoons cinnamon, 1/2 teaspoon nutmeg and ginger, 1 tablespoon flour, 1 can pumpkin.

BUTTERED CALIFLOWER

Break a firm head of califlower into sprigs and cook in boiling water until about half done. Take up, drain, and put into saucepan with 2 tablespoons of melted butter, the juice of 1 lemon, 2 tablespoons white sauce or of cream; a pinch of cayenne, a little salt, and a small cup of hot water. Cook until tender; take up, strain the gravy, and to it add 1 cup of cream or white sauce; pour over califlower, and serve at once.

STUFFED TOMATOES

Six firm tomatoes, 2 cups soft breadcrumbs, half teaspoon salt, 3/4 teaspoon pepper, 1 large tablespoon melted butter. Prepare tomatoes and cut off stem ends; remove pulp and fill with breadcrumb mixture. Bake in a hot oven 30 minutes. Pulp may be seasoned to taste. Cook in pan and serve as a sauce.

CORN SALAD

Twelve large ears of corn, 1/2 head cabbage, 4 celery stalks, 2 green peppers, 2 red peppers, salt and sugar to taste, vinegar to cover; bring to a boil and cook 15 minutes; shell 1 pint of green beans; cook until tender and add to the other ingredients; this must be sealed airtight.

PEANUT BRITTLE

Mix 3 cups of granulated sugar with 1 scant cup boiling water and 1/4 teaspoon soda, let it melt over slow fire, cook gently without stirring until a little drop in cold water hardens quickly; add 1 cup roasted shell and skinned peanuts with a little use of spoon as possible; turn the mixture in buttered pans and cut while hot; the brittleness of the candy depends much upon the scant use of the spoon; to stir sugar candy is to invite granulation.
