GAS FROM THE AIR

It is almost impossible to make predictions nowadays in the field of science and invention, because by the time the ink dries the statement is no longer prediction but fact and reality. A 3138 mile continuous flight from Hawaii to Suva, in the Fiji Islands, is ample proof that a heavier-than-air machine can be made to work mechanically perfect, or so near perfect as to arrive at its destination in safety. The only question is one of fuel.

Somebody ought to get busy right away (if somebody hasn't already done it) and announce that in the future gasoline, oil, food, parts and supplies will be loaded en-flight or enroute. Captive balloons will be stationed at points along the path of flight. Planes will sail along and grab a couple hundred gallons of gas or whatever is needed, just as a railroad train grabs a mail bag at a jerk-water station, and at some that are not so jerk-water.

Hereafter it will not be a question of fuel so much as of bearings, propeller shafts, wings or other parts of the machinery, combined with human endurance. It is entirely possible—in fact probable—that in not many years hence an airplane will circle the earth without landing except at the place of starting. Let him who reads laugh, but let him also WATCH!

"HOME TOWNLETS" (All Rights Reserved)

No issue of any newspaper should be published without saying something in behalf of its own home town. So in this issue we say, "Here is to Our Town, may her future troubles consist of trying to find places to put the people who come here to trade, to live, to work and to play."

Saying good things about our town is a toast. Doing good things FOR our town is the butter that goes on the toast.

Beat your swords into plowshares and work instead of fight; beat your hammer into a saw and saw instead of knock.

Talk about efficiency! China can fight a revolution and get it settled before America can find out why she is in Nicaragua.

Boost till it hurts.

A BEAUTY "WAR"

Galveston, Texas, deserves the automatic fly swatter for pulling off a bathing beauty parade and contest the other day involving 10 nations and 21 states of the Union. A crowd, estimated at 150,000 looked on.

Many people object to beauty parade. These objectors are sometimes wholly justified in their protests. But so long as we have beaches there will be bathing suits, and so long as we have bathing suits people are going to wear them. So long as people are going to wear them, we may as well try to get beautiful people into them as people who are not so beautiful. There are just as pretty girls on the beach as ever get into the water. The prettier they are the less they get into the water. If many of these "bathing" beauties didn't have bath tubs at home they would be in an awful shape as far as hygiene is concerned.

But back to the subject. A beauty "war" or contest of international scope may not develop any serious consequences; at least no bloodshed. It is a war in which all concerned win, because the supporters of every such beauty always win in their own opinions.

True, primary elections cost more than the old party convention system, but a lot more fellows get a whack at the money.

Some men have advice given to them—by their banker; some have it sold to them—by their lawyer; others have it thrust upon them—by their back-seat drivers.

It's pretty well settled where the good will go. It isn't much of a moot question where the bad will wind up. But what worries us is, what become of the indifferent?

The latest in transportation is a contraption that propels itself by shooting off at the rear. But the inventor is far behind the times. Many a married man already drives his car, however perilously, in spite of hot shots from the rear seat.

TIGARD.

The Durham school will be re-modeled this summer. The rooms are too large for the ordinary classes and the cloak rooms too large, so the school board intend to enlarge the cloak rooms and then put French doors between the two, so that they will have a large auditorium. The rooms will be kalsomined and painted also.

P. B. Case is the retiring director in the school election June 18.

The Oregon Telephone Co. laid cables as far as the high school Saturday. Each cable hold 400 wires, enough to furnish phones for this district for some time.
