

OREGON INDUSTROGRAMS
by DAN C. FREEMAN

The movement towards conservation of waste materials, the making of by-product into useful marketable commodities is exemplified by the recent drying process of buttermilk in Oregon. Dried buttermilk has all the food elements of fresh liquid buttermilk with further advantages of economy in freight. It proves to be a valuable constituent when incorporated in a feed mix for cattle, hogs and poultry.

Dried buttermilk is produced and marketed at a splendid profit, whereas in the past a vast amount of buttermilk went into the sewers except a small percentage which brought but two cents per gallon or less. It is such ingenious efforts as this that make for prosperity.

Of more than eighty million dollars of exports of Oregon products from the Columbia river considerably more than half of this amount is manufactured commodities having passed through one or more processes up to the completely finished article.

The hope and the best bet of the lumber industry of the Pacific Northwest is in the increasing range of demand, the finding of new uses for Douglas fir, the spruce, etc., and as the desirable qualities of these ways are ascertained and applied the market will move accordingly.

SECOND CODLING MOTH SPRAY

Field observations made by entomologists of the experiment station indicate that the second codling moth cover spray in the Willamette valley should be applied now. There are plenty of moths on the wing in the orchards and eggs are being laid in considerable numbers.

The spray is lead arsenate powder used at the rate of two to four pounds to 100 gallons of water. Thoroughness of application is essential in codling moth control. The entire surface of the apple and pear, and every apple and pear on the tree should be thoroughly covered with the arsenical if worm injury is to be prevented.
