

The International Federation of University Women has just launched the campaign, decided upon at its Washington meeting over a year ago, to raise a million-dollar fellowship fund. Many opportunities for advance study are offered to men but the number available for women is very limited. The need for fellowships has been shown in the experience of the Oregon division of the organization which has recently awarded its first fellowship to Miss Laura Garnjobst of Salem for some important work in biological research. The committee on the award received twelve applications from Oregon women for this fellowship and nearly all the candidates had done graduate work with distinct promise for the future. The fund sponsored by the International Federation would offer greatly increased opportunities for women of this type.

The International Federation includes about seventeen nations in its membership and it hopes by means of these international fellowships not only to further greater educational and research advantages for women but also to promote a better understanding and more cordial relations between women of the different countries and so to forward international peace.
