Social Science Solution to Peace Problem

War Not Only Wicked, But Futile, Says Dr. Hall, President of University of Oregon, in Series of Articles

This is the first of a series of six articles written for this paper by Dr. Arnold Bennett Hall, president of the University of Oregon, on the problem of international peace. Dr. Hall is an authority in this field and was one of the founders of the Social Science Research Council of America.

By DR. ARNOLD BENNETT HALL
President of the University of Oregon

The "war against war" that has occupied the attention of poets, philosophers, and humanitarians for many generations, and which in recent years has occupied the practical affairs of men of practical affairs, has passed through several significant stages, culminating in what by generous use of language, may be called a scientific attack upon the problem.

Original Dr. Hall protests against war were based largely upon the principles of christianity or the motives of a growing spirit of humanitarianism. In either case, the appeal was largely an emotional one. It was a hortatory protest against the christian character and the inhuman consequences of military strife.

The difficulties with these protests and with the more or less visionary proposals and utopias that frequently resulted, was that they had little other basis than an emotional protest. There was no scientific system of social engineering to give it an articulate and effective expression. There was no utilitarian argument to show that war did not pay, that would ripen into a profound conviction, capable of restraining human impulses and directing human conduct. The result was that in the presence of a threatened war, the moral and religious were impotent and abortive. For their emotional protests were weak and ineffective against the much stronger emotional appeal of war. Military genius, using the spirit of nationalism, and equipped with the most dramatic instrument of emotional propaganda that human experience knows—the tragedy and heroism of the battlefield—made itself omnipotent in the field of emotional appeal.

Peace Appeals to Intelligence
But at last the movement against war has passed into a new stage. The new arguments for peace are based upon facts rather than fancy. The appeal is to intelligence, rather than to emotion. The effort is to evaluate war as an instrument of social accomplishment. We talk now about the cost of war and its ultimate gains. Arguments are being presented that the victor in a great modern war sacrifices much more than he can hope to win. The whole emotional protest against war as a wicked and iniquitous institution is being supplemented by the more permanently persuasive proposal that war is not only wicked, but that it is futile; that it is not only inhuman, but that it is impotent.

With the dawning consciousness of these facts, there seems to grow an almost universal desire for peace. But how can a society organize for peace? How can we change the habits of human behavior that have prevailed for decades and for centuries? How can we organize this growing will for peace into an articulate, constructive program that will be effective and adequate? These problems lead us at once to a consideration of the subject of social control and international peace. That those interested in averting war are concerning themselves with the technique of social control is but another link of evidence to show that the present "war against war" has emerged from an emotional to a scientific status.

What do we mean by "social control?" As applied to a domestic or national group, it has frequently been defined as "the restraint of the one by the many," or "the dominance of the individual by the group," or "the ascendancy of the social consciousness over the personal consciousness." In other words, social control is the process by which the group determines, at least within certain limits, the conduct of its constituent parts.

In a society where democracy is an established fact, this he seemed to imply the existence of several factors. In the first place, there must be an effective public opinion, dealing with those questions in regard to which individuals are controlled. It seems clear that social control did not emerge out of primitive savagery, except as it was evolved by a group consciousness, and the establishment of the mores of the tribe, dealing with certain forms of individual behavior.

The second function of social control is an effective instrument for the expression and enforcement of this public opinion. It is one thing to have a public opinion definitely formulated and yet to see that it is faithfully enforced. There is undoubtedly a public opinion in Chicago against murder, and yet the development of social engineering and the perfection of our machinery for the apprehension and punishment of criminals has been so defective that public opinion has seemed at times quite impotent. There is reason to believe now that among great masses of the peoples of the world, there is a genuine desire for peace, and yet the clouds of war hang heavily upon the international horizon because the technique of social engineering and constructive international statesmanship has not yet found a way by which the nations are willing to unite their forces in an effective protest against the state that would dare to inaugurate aggressive war.

Assent of Minority Vital
A third implication of an effective social control is the willingness of the minority to acquiesce in the mandate of the majority. As a rule, that spirit of acquiescence generally prevails among the American public and yet there are certain states in which the Fifteenth amendment has never been enforced and for many years to come, at least, will never be observed. We hat the war between the states in this country because the minority of the people were unwilling to accept the majority judgment in regard to matters confided to the federal government. An attempt on the part of our government to interfere with religious liberty would create an irreconcilable opposition before which public opinion and the instrumentalities for its enforcement would prove helplessly impotent. For this reason, there are many things with which social control should not attempt to deal.

Finally, the implication of social control is a sufficient force to restrain the criminal and to make wrong-doing an ill bargain to the doer. Public opinion, supported by force, is impotent in the presence of the criminally minded. Force, however, without a strong public opinion to support it, will prove futile as an instrument of social control. Theoretically, the executive and military forces of the state constitute a sufficient force to overwhelm the bootleggers in the narcotics traffic, but as a fact, such force is frequently not employed and there are flagrant violations on every hand. There are states in which the governors could not be elected if they promised to observe their oath of office to enforce the statutes against intoxicating liquor. Here we have the force, but we do not have back of it a sufficient united and powerful public opinion to make the social control contemplated in the prohibition law effective.

INQUIRY LIST NO. 330

The following people have written to the Land Settlement Department asking for information on Oregon. We have answered these inquiries, sending general literature and they have returned signed questionnaires giving the following information. These prospective settlers are all sufficiently financed for their needs:

21531—Mr. R. E. Lindsey, 808 W. Park Avenue, Champaign, Illinois, plans to make a trip to Oregon next July and wants from 80 to 100 acres suitable for general farming. Is interested in the northwestern part of the state, especially in the Willamette Valley.

21532—Mr. C. L. Mardock, Box 219, Pierceville, Kansas, will make a trip next summer and wants improved land suitable for stock raising and general farming. Prefers to rent or lease for the first year.

21533—Mr. L. O. Bussard, R. F. D. Harvard, Nebraska, is making plans to make a trip to Oregon next spring and wants from 40 to 80 acres of improved land suitable for dairying, in Clackamas or Marion counties.

21534—Mr. Alfred Adams, General Delivery, Fellows, California, will make a trip next year and wants about 160 acres of improved land suitable for dairying, hogs, poultry, fruit, sheepraising and general farming.

21537—Mrs. J. E. Moser, 362 Reed Avenue, Marion, Ohio, will make a trip to Oregon as soon as they dispose of their property in Ohio, and are interested in securing land suitable for poultry and fruit raising, either in the western or southwestern part of the state. Have visited the Willamette, Umpqua, and Rogue River Valleys, also the Columbia river district and are well pleased.

21538—Mr. Clarence Barton, North County Line, Hinsdale, Illinois, is interested in securing 40 or more acres of improved land on the coast suitable for general farming. Wants land to be very gently rolling with some fruit on it.

21539—Mr. J. G. Kearney, P. O. Box 104, Somerton, Arizona, is planning on making a trip to Oregon next June or July and wants improved land suitable for poultry and fruit raising, in western Oregon. Prefers to locate in some valley near navigable river.

21540—Mr. Robert L. Johnston, R. R. No. 1, Marion, Iowa, is planning on coming to Oregon in the spring and wants a place suitable for dairying in the Willamette valley. Prefers to rent at first.

21541—Mr. Thomas McDuff, 2395 Niagara Street, Buffalo, New York, plans to come to Oregon next July and wants about 50 acres of improved land in western Oregon suitable for poultry, fruit, and general farming. Also interested in irrigated land. Prefers to have half of farm in fruit.

PRIZES TO BE AWARDED FOR BEST ESSAYS ON THRIFT

A radio thrift essay contest is being conducted throughout the Pacific Northwest by the American Trust Company of Portland. Prizes consist of deposits on one of the Company's Thrift Accounts and range from one hundred dollars to five dollars in the Senior Division which includes all persons over twelve years of age and from twenty-five dollars to five dollars in the Junior Division which includes all persons under twelve years of age. The winning essay in each division will be read over radio station KEX and over radio station KTBR, during one of the American Trust Company's regular talk hours. The first three winners in each division will be announced over those stations.

The essays are limited to one thousand words in the Senior Division and to five hundred words in the Junior Division. It is required that all essays shall be upon some phase of Thrift and that they be written in such a way as will be likely to increase active interest in Thrift. The contest ends Dec. 31st at mid-night.

Material is being furnished prospective essayists by means of fifteen minute Thrift talks made over radio station KEX every Thursday evening at five forty-five o'clock and over radio station KTBR every Thursday evening at eight-thirty o'clock. The talks will embrace a history of Thrift from its most primitive beginnings to its present day status.

Camera Reporting Now Offered at University

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, Eugene —Photography in newspaper work is receiving special recognition this year at the University of Oregon school of journalism in the establishment of a new course entitled "Camera Reporting." George H. Godfrey, director of the bureau of public relations, is instructor in the course, which involves practical use of cameras and training in recognizing opportunities for good newspaper pictures.

The course is made a selective one among students in journalism, and all must own their own cameras. Six students, all but one of them seniors, are taking the work, and a small battery of cameras click every time anything interesting happens about the campus.

Nearly 2,000 periodicals are received currently by the University of Oregon library, besides many daily and weekly newspapers of the state. About 140 Oregon newspapers are regularly bound.

The Oregon Law Review, official organ of the Oregon Bar association, is published quarterly under the editorship of the law faculty of the University of Oregon.

Thirteen languages are taught at the University of Oregon. They are: Danish, Norwegian, Swedish, Greek, Latin, Vulgar Latin and Old Provençal, Old Icelandic, German, Middle High German, Old High German, French, Spanish, Italian, and Portuguese.

The only Oregon chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, leading national honorary scholastic fraternity, is located at the University of Oregon.

One of the most notable botanical collections in the country is at the University of Oregon, where more than 35,000 specimens, largely from Oregon, may be viewed.

There are 100 acres of ground, situated in the most attractive part of Eugene, in the University of Oregon campus.

Two of the six men in physical education work in the United States possessing degrees of philosophy are members of the school of physical education staff at the University of Oregon.

Burt Brown Barker, vice-president of the University of Oregon, is one of the founders of Delta Sigma Rho, national honorary debating fraternity.

A daily newspaper, the Emerald, is published by students of the University of Oregon, appearing every morning but Sunday and Monday.

Co-eds at the University of Oregon "drum up" the business for an annual shoe-shine day conducted for the sake of charity by the junior class.

The medical school of the University of Oregon was established in Portland in 1887. Sixteen years later the Willamette University department of medicine was merged with it, leaving the University of Oregon the sole medical school in the Pacific Northwest.

The law library at the University of Oregon alone contains 17,000 volumes.
