REP. R. FRANK PETERS OBJECTS TO ROAD TAX MEASURE

Salem, Feb. 2—"I object to any amendment which will exempt my county from coming under this bill," said Representative R. Frank Peters of Washington County in speaking of the measure that would force cities to pay their share of the county road tax, even if their charter exempted them from such a tax.

Mr. Peters reflected the general attitude of the House toward this bill. When it was discovered that the provision which prevented all counties having a population of less than 25,000 by the 1920 census from enforcing the payment of this tax, would exempt Washington, Marion, Lane, Umatilla and Clackamas counties, steps were taken toward amendment. As Mr. Peters said, all counties should be equalized under this act with the exception of Multnomah, for Portland, had always contributed heavily to road funds. The basis of population was raised to 100,000 by vote of the House, and the bill referred to committee that the five above counties might have a chance for a hearing, if they so desired.

Nelson Walker returned home Wednesday after a two months illness in the Good Samaritan hospital.

As a large part of the pipe is wood stave pipe which has been laid for 20 years, the items of replacement will in the near future become an important matter of financial consideration."

LINCOLN'S PART IN HISTORY

Many are living who lived during the latter part of the lifetime of Abraham Lincoln. A few remain who knew him personally. All of the American people, and thousands in foreign lands across the oceans, hold his name and memory in respect and admiration.

Each recurring birthday anniversary of the immortal-like Lincoln brings its lessons. For Lincoln was the type of man who would sacrifice all other conditions for principle or whatever was believed by him to be the correct and honest attitude. Versatility was among his characteristics. Whether any given situation staged the humorous or the tragic he seemed to have the happy faculty of knowing how to take advantage of the circumstance.

The side-glances of Lincoln's character reveal perhaps as much of interest as his accomplishments as a statesman prove his ability. Above all, he was "immortally human." There is no end to his life. There can be no last word concerning his career. He grew to greatness while living; he remains alive to the dead. In him, honesty was not only a virtue, it was power. Simplicity was not only his guiding trait, it was his strength in great tribulation.

Lincoln, like the great general, Lee, understood the theory of advocacy; that is, he knew that his mission was one of representing the people in great issues. With this in mind he always stood ready and willing to sacrifice himself for the causes which he challenged.

Had it not been for men like Lincoln, editorial writers would have to fancy their subjects and draw upon their imaginations. But with his life and works before them there is presented a vast panorama of human events; a period of absorbing interest because it is magnificent and epochal. His personal career was typical of his time, yet it stood out in decisive contrast, and constitutes an important phase in American and even world history.

SEEMED TO BE CONTAGIOUS

Little tots are always doing something unusual at school. The Ever triplets at Aloha set a new record this week. At recess Wednesday morning Florence came running to her teacher, Mrs. C. E. Barker and showed her a big bump on the left side of her forehead that she received when she hit the door.

At noon Laura came in crying. She had bumped her forehead on the left side. Fifteen minutes later Elizabeth came crying to the teacher, and she also had a bump on the left side of her forehead.

When school commenced the triplets sat in a row, each one had a black and blue spot on their forehead on the left side. Was it contagious, or a coincident?
