THE GRAND CANYON AND ITS SURVEY

The following letter was received from Cecil D. Emmons who is now in Arizona in the forestry service:

The boys were visiting around their fire in the lodge chatting with visitors to the park who were much interested in the hearty bunch of outdoor men who were not expelled by the hardships of prodigious mountains they had come many miles to learn something of the mysteries which are concealed in the interior of the park. Stories and experiences of the men were somewhat interrupted as I entered the room dripping wet and stood in front of the huge fireplace.

The boys became heavy drinkers of tea and always kept hot water to appease the beany thirst which usually takes place in the evening. This was of course just what I was looking for so the public and all joined in tea and some of the pastry baked by our cook. The lodge was our headquarters while at the Bright Angel Camp. Stories from many places and discriminating people were enough for the folds of a book and perhaps some have been placed in magazines for that is the way many seek material for their stories. Of one I happened to know is Frank Harrison Kent, author of "The Masked Study" and other stories which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Material for his next story to appear the first week in April Saturday Evening Post, "The Great North west" is written on life of outdoor men in the city and their tasks in the open spaces.

The next morning the party took an early start for the descent into the canyon to the river. We prepared for what is termed as spike camp. Each man carries a portion of food and field equipment for a two day camp.

As we overlooked the terrific depths that part the walls of hundreds of castles of mountainous bulk located only in barely discernible penstrokes of detail, clouds of mist were rising from the tops of the temples and the canyon was completely filled with fog. As the sun mounted, the curtain of mist suddenly broke into cloud fleeces, and while we gazed these fleeces rise and disappear, leaving the canyon bare. At once around the bases of the lowest cliffs white puffs begin to appear and their number multiplies until once more they rise and overflow the rim, and it is as if you stood on some land's end looking down upon a formless void. Then quickly comes the complete dissipation, and again the marshalling in the depths, the upward advance, the total diffusion and the speedy vanishing, repeated over and over until the warm walls have expelled their saturation. It is a place indeed created by some magician's wand.

We descended into the canyon over the Bright Angel trail and saw many wonders and things of interest to detract us from our attention of sore and tired muscles due to walking and heavy packs.

We reached the verge of the river just as the sun was sinking in the west. The canyon was sinking into mysterious purple shadows, the Shunmo Alnar tipped with a golden ray, and against the leaden horizon the long line of the Echo Cliffs reflected a soft brilliance of indescribable beauty a light that, elsewhere, surely never was on sea or land. We stood upon a sandy rift, confronted by nearly vertical walls at whose base a tawny torrent pitches in a giddy onward slide that gives him momentarily the sensation of slipping into an abyss.

Dwarfed by such prodigious shores, which rise immediately from the water at an angle that would deny footing to a mountain sheep, it is not easy to estimate confidently the width and volume of the river. Choked by the stubborn granite, its width is perhaps between 250 and 300 feet, its velocity fifteen miles an hour, and its volume and turmoil equal to the Whirlwind Rapids of Niagara.

For only a few hundred yards is the tortuous stream visible making its traverse by the surveyor tedious and slow. Issuing as from a mountain side, it slides with oily smoothness for a space and suddenly breaks into violent waves that comb back against the current and shoot unexpectedly here and there, while the volume sways, tidelike, from side to side and long curling breakers form and hold their outline lengthwise of the shore, despite the seemingly irresistible velocity of the water.
