GUESS I CAN STAND SOME GOOD ADVICE

Some mighty Big Men Have Been Helped by Some Seemingly Trifling Suggestions
By Arthur A. Crosby

My remembrance of childhood is of a time when I was constantly being told of my egregious faults, and was forever being made the victim of a whole lot of counsel and admonition—practically all of which went in one ear and came out the other, without making any palpable impression while passing through the think cavity.

Now, though, I am, as you'd maybe say, pretty much grown up, I'm still being informed of my shortcomings, and still a victim of a lot of advice that others think very greatly needed.

Maybe I do require it. I hope heaven will forgive my gentle advisers if I really don't need their admonitions. May the time they waste in trying to make a dent on this poor old set of brains be compensated for in some happy manner.

When I reflect upon it all, I have to admit that not all the preaching done at me is entirely useless.

They have repeatedly told me not to act in haste, lest I repent at leisure. Just when I was thinking about something real pleasant, up comes a big impulse, and off I go, spurred to the doing of something which afterward, as I should have known at first, I am going to regret having done.

"What fools we are!" mused the poet. He meant me when he said that. O Henry began one of his interesting short stories by remarking of his sort of hobo hero, that the fellow, first enjoyed a bath at municipal expense, and secondly, began writing letters to the newspapers. In other words, he became a regular nut.

Now I've come to the real subject. Mark Twain used to grow intensely warm under the collar upon being harassed by some persistent critic or some insistent debt-collector. While burning up with his uncontrollable wrath, Mark would sit down and dash off a letter full of fire and brimstone, a rebuke to the fellow whose censure or threats had unbalanced his intellect.

Then Mark's good, sensible wife would appear, and would do her utmost to dissuade her spouse from sending his vitriolic epistle. Once in a while, he sent his hot diggity letters out without her knowledge, but usually he listened to her and held them back from the mail. Then, in a day or two, when he had calmed down, he realized the folly of his epistolary passion, and would make a resolve never to be imprudent in letter writing again.

Well, other men of big minds have been equally irrational upon occasions, but their hearts were just as big as their minds, and at last they were subject to their hearts, which forbade what emotion would have impelled them to do.

Everything tends to prove that the older we get, the damphooler we become. In view of that incontrovertible fact, it seems to me that I should be willing to listen to reason (so-called)—my conclusion being judging by myself that a little friendly counsel is really now and again—of benefit.

A CLEVER SIGN

Be sure to kick if we are wrong,
But kick to us and make it strong.
To make things right is our delight,
If we are wrong and you are right.
The mind is a bank that pays compound interest on the knowledge you deposit in it.

ALL THE WORK THAT HE CAN DO

"All the work I can do," says Dr. J. E. Tryzelaar. "My patrons must be satisfied, otherwise they would not come again and solicit my help in providing them with arch supports made to fit their feet."

Dr. Tryzelaar, whose ad appears in this issue, knows that his work recommends his service to the public.

"Well," he says, "if I conscientiously try to please my patrons, it is only just that they should come again to me with some praise of my service to them."

Details of Dr. Tryzelaar's work will be found in his ad in this paper.

BOTH FOUND RELIEF FROM WEARINESS

"I was so tired one day last week that I could barely move another step," explained a certain prominent society woman of this district.

"I had spent the day in calling, and at the close of the day I was completely exhausted. When I arrived home, I felt as if I should never wish to face the beginning of another day."

"My son came into the room where I was lying on a couch, and showed much concern, thinking I was perhaps taken suddenly with some illness. When I told him I was merely fatigued by the day's exertions, he laughingly chided me for surrendering myself to such a physical and mental condition."

"Let me take you to Portland to Mrs. Lydia Norris' parlors in the Alisky building, where you can have the advantage of a strengthening bath and massage. I know you will feel like a new woman."

"I will," said I, and I did. "I did not regret it. I must say that I got just what I needed in the treatment she gave me. I have to thank Mrs. Norris for restoring me to my normal self—and she did it in a remarkably short time. I appreciate the carefulness of her treatment, her interest in her patients and her thoroughness in every detail of her practice. It means much to us tired society women to secure the services of one so skilled as she in her work."

Mrs. Norris values this compliment to her skill and methods. She was delighted to obtain this report at her office, 308 Alisky Building, Portland. See her ad in this issue.

COLLEGE UNITES WITH HOSPITAL

To secure the health of a large number of patients, the Pacific Chiropractic College clinic has affiliated with the Lloyd Boulevard hospital, Portland.

This institute, known as the Lloyd Boulevard hospital, owes its inception and organization to the ambition, the energy, and the determination of the present directors of the Pacific Chiropractic College to do everything in their power to give their students a thorough and practical course. making the Pacific Chiropractic college an outstanding feature in the Chiropractic world, will be carried into the field of hospital work with undiminished vigor.

The services of the Clinic has been of great help to scores of persons in all sections of Oregon, and now that facilities have been increased through the affiliation with the hospital, the doctors of the Clinic are confident that many new corridors of opportunity for drugless practitioners shall have been provided.

In the future issues of this paper, something more direct and specific shall be said of the work done by the Pacific Chiropractic College Clinic, whose head is Dr. Budden, a doctor who has achieved much not only for his profession and the patients of drugless practitioners, but also for the development of the art of drugless practice, while he has been consistently a worker for the upbuilding of Portland as a hospital center. Graduates of the college will have an opportunity now to acquire practice in actual work and experience. "This is a great development," says Dr. Budden. "But the future will bring many more of inestimable value to the public as well as to the profession."

HITEON NEWS

Haying is about a thing of the past for this season. The grain will soon be ready to cut and bids fair to be a heavy yield.

Several from Hiteon attended the Kinton grange dance last Thursday evening.

Miss Dorothy Struthers spent Monday at her parents home.

Henry and Archie Davies returned home Sunday after a delightful week with Grandma Olson at Seaside.

Hiteon was represented at Champoeg Park Sunday by Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Van Kleek and Mrs. C. Christensen who report a pleasant day.

The Tweedy family are driving a Chevrolet purchased at Stipes Garage in Beaverton.
