

"SIDEGLANCES"

Mrs. E. R. Stromquist's mother is quite aged, and spends her time visiting members of her family who are married, and who live at various corners of the state. Recently she closed a visit with a daughter who lives at some little distance from Tigard, and to assure the elderly lady's comfort during her journey to Tigard by stage, the daughter thought to give her a bottle of water, that she might not have to leave the stage to quench her thirst. It happened that the only bottle that could be carried with convenience in the mother's satchel was one that closely resembled a whisky bottle. In fact, it probably was a whisky bottle. During the long journey home, the old lady partook of some of the contents of the bottle, so that by the time she reached the stage depot at Portland, the bottle was but about half full. Upon entering the stage depot, she put the bottle on a seat, covering it with her shawl, while busy with arrangements for the Tigard stage.

But some one had seen that bottle. Perchance some one on the stage during the journey to Portland had greedily and thirstily looked on as the old lady sipped at it now and then. True, its content was pure drinking water, but one can imagine that it might have looked to that other person, like "white moon." At any rate, when Mrs. Stromquist's mother put the bottle under her shawl on the seat in the Portland stage terminal, there was a hurry of feet. Quick hands darted under that said shawl, grabbed the bottle and were gone. The man, or maybe woman, whose eager eyes had watched that bottle all during the dry, hot journey, having gotten hold of the prize, quickly hurried to a place of safety where he might have, undisturbed, a little snack of—water! Your reporter likes to imagine what happened as that liquid reached the parched throat.

Incorporation Main Topic at Luncheon

There were a number of visitors at the meeting of the Boosters Club held Wednesday noon February 12, in the Blue Bird Inn. Incorporation of Multnomah and vicinity was the subject of the addresses and informal discussion which followed. Mr. Erickson, Mayor of Beaverton and Mr. Snider of Gresham were the speakers. The former extolling the beauties of Multnomah and the valley and the latter giving a very clear and concise statement of the procedure necessary to incorporate. When in renumerating the officers and salaries, he remarked that the mayor and six councilmen would have to serve without pay, the writer wondered whether that statement would have any effect on the impetus of the movement. If the business men are already tired of the cares connected with the civic responsibilities of Multnomah, would any of them be disinterested enough to assume the larger responsibilities of these offices, merely for the empty honor of being mayor or councilmen of the proposed incorporated city?

New Webfoot Football Coach Arrives

Here is the latest picture of Dr. Clarence W. Spears, formerly head coach at Minnesota, who becomes head football mentor at the University of Oregon. Dr. Spears soon will start an intensive spring session that will take two months.

University of Oregon, Eugene—Dr. Clarence W. Spears, coach at the University of Minnesota, has been engaged to become head football coach at the University of Oregon, and will report on the campus here in time for spring practice.

Expressions of congratulation for the signing of Dr. Spears has come in from every section of the state. His splendid reputation not only on the gridiron but in other educational work as well highly qualifies him for the position, it is declared by those who know him.

"Dr. Spears' theory is that highly successful football, sound scholarship and generous high-mindedness go hand in hand," it was declared by Dr. Arnold Bennett Hall, president of the university, when Dr. Spears had agreed to come here. "This makes him fit perfectly into the professional theory of coaching that we are working out in connection with our school of physical education.

"Dr. Spears will be professor of physical education and have charge of training men for football coaching. With him as the key man in this new development we may look forward to putting the training of football coaches on a scientific and educational basis.

"Our school of physical education is already internationally known because of its research activities and the scientific character of its training. With Dr. Spears bringing to it his technical genius, enthusiasm and personality we are confidently expecting a steady and sound development in the direction of still greater renown.

"Dr. Spears will receive a total salary of $11,500, of which the major portion, $6,500, will be paid by the Associated Students for coaching football. The University will make the customary contribution of $3,500, and the health service will pay from student fees $1,500 for his work as University physician. In point of salary Dr. Spears will rank fifth among the coaches in the Pacific Coast Conference.

"Doubtless the taxpayers of the state will want to know their relation to this new adjustment which involved a total compensation of $3,600 more annually than was paid to the preceding coach. It must be remembered first, that athletics is in the hands of the Associated Students and that the state's contribution of $3,500 annually to the coach's compensation is the same amount that was paid to his predecessor and is more in the nature of an investment than an expense.

"In the last ten years the Associated Students have made a contribution to building and equipment alone, from athletic receipts and fees that the students voted themselves, of $274,659. The University's share of the coach's salary during this period has been $17,000. The capacity of the students to make these substantial contributions to the University depends largely upon the efficiency of the coach. The greater the reputation and ability of the coach, the greater is the income that the Associated Students receive, and the surplus of which in turn they invest in permanent improvements to the University. In addition to paying some of the salaries of men engaged in teaching in the school of physical education and providing instructors in the other fields of inter-collegiate athletics, they have recently purchased thirty acres of land greatly needed as an addition to the campus and have erected McArthur Court at a cost of about $200,000.

"It would seem clear from the above that the employment of a man of outstanding national reputation as a football coach will greatly increase the capacity of the Student Body to carry on the activities which in ten years have saved the taxpayers of the state over a quarter million dollars, and that the state's contribution of $3,500 annually as a means of encouraging the students and giving official sanction and participation in their splendid service is amply justified.

"There is no doubt but that there is a decided tendency to over-emphasize the importance of athletics in higher education. The best solution that I know to this over-emphasis is to place athletics in the charge of men who believe in education first and who see in athletics only a means to a larger educational end. Dr. Spears has won a reputation as being a great and inspiring teacher. He will soon win the confidence and admiration of student body and public alike, and the prestige that will be thrown solidly behind the educational program and ideals of the University of Oregon. This program and these ideals we have talked over together for hours and he comes to Oregon determined to make a great football team and just as determined to be a successful champion of the finest ideals of education and of life that the University of Oregon is striving to serve."
