Development Issue to Appeal Strongly to Home Seekers

Hundreds of prospective home-seekers and investors all over the United States will receive copies of the forthcoming Development Edition of the Enterprise and will be "sold" on Beaverton and the Tualatin Valley. The story of the community and the valley will be told in an entrancing manner, although bombastic phrases and "wild-cat" promises will find no place in the edition. It is felt that by sticking to facts the story can be made adequately interesting and sufficiently impelling. Time and expense will not be spared in the publication of this big special edition.

An edition of this type has never been attempted throughout the valley and it is gratifying to note that this initial effort is meeting with wide-spread approval. Business men, as well as farmers, property owners, school, church, club and civic leaders are enthusiastically supporting the publication. These people realize that the edition will go a long way towards bringing new settlers and new capital into the valley. It is only through such efforts that the area can come strongly into its own.

Definite date as to publication cannot be announced at this time. However, it is reasonably certain that the big edition will be off the presses between the 1st and 15th of October. Several weeks will be required in the gathering of data to say nothing of the mechanical end of the business. Additional help in both the field and office forces will be needed, and every effort will be made to speed up the work.

A mailing list of all the homes within a radius of 10 miles is now being compiled so that those in this section can be reminded of the advantages of their locality. Copies will be reserved for individuals while thousands of other copies will be sent out through the state chamber of commerce and other organizations. Those represented in the edition will be sure of getting two-fold value; that is to say, they will reach every home in this immediate territory and will extend their message to the four winds through outside distribution.

Again those who are interested in this work, those who have interesting stories to tell, or pictures they would like to have appear in the edition are earnestly asked to get in touch with the Enterprise office. There's a story in your home or your district so let it be told. Join with the others who are giving such splendid support to the idea. And above all, those desiring extra copies are requested to make their reservations now. Simply write into the Enterprise office or call for the copies. Names will be taken down and the copies will be reserved if it is advisable to act on this at once.

Portion of Proceeds from Football Game go to Shrine Hospital

When the big varsity football teams of Oregon State and Washington colleges meet in their annual Pacific Coast conference struggle on Multnomah field, Portland, November 1, they will not only be battling for coast gridiron honors, but for crippled children.

One-third of the net proceeds will go to the Shrine Hospital for Crippled children in Portland, and Shriners throughout the Pacific northwest are leading in a movement to pack Multnomah stadium as it has never been packed before.

Ticket committees have been appointed in every city and town in the Pacific northwest. Those named for Beaverton are Otto Erickson, representing the Shrine; D. C. Howland representing O. S. C.; Franklin Harrison representing W. S. C. and C. E. Allen of the Southern Pacific.

As a gridiron classic, the game will be worth going miles to see. Coaches Schissler, of O. S. C., and Hollingbery, of W. S. C., will see to this. As a spectacle, the game should prove of equal interest. The Shrine Imperial Potentate, Esten Fletcher, of Rochester, N. Y., with his retinue will be present. The uniformed patrols, bands and chanters of all Shrine temples in Oregon, Washington and Idaho will vie with the college bands and rooters in adding color to the game.

Tickets, which are to be exchanged for reserved seats, are being placed on sale everywhere this week and can be obtained from members of the local committee.

Cover Crop Needed In Orchard to Keep Fertility in Moisture

Cover crops are needed in the orchards of Washington county to maintain good yields and high quality, according to W. F. Cyrus, county agent. Orchard crops use up soil fertility just as any other field crop. The grain farmer can rotate his crops and maintain soil fertility. The orchardist must use other means to supply the needed material. Plowing under a cover crop every year in the orchard will maintain fertility and build up the moisture holding capacity of the soil. Commercial fertilizers are of benefit but commercial fertilizers usually do not accomplish their best results on soils that have a depleted supply of organic material.

Lowered prices for certain orchard crops have frequently resulted in the neglect of the maintenance of orchard soils. Neglect of this phase of orchard management results in still further losses to the orchardist. Lowered soil fertility and moisture holding capacity lowers the vitality of the orchard. Lowered vitality means less and poorer quality fruit and frequently more damage from severe winter weather.

Depleted orchard soils sometimes fail to return much of a cover crop when vetch and grain is used unless this crop is supplemented by an application of sulphate of ammonia or nitrate of soda 100 to 200 pounds per acre in late February. Some growers reports O. T. McWhorter, extension horticulturist "sometimes apply 100 pounds of nitrate of soda in late February when it is desired to secure a heavier cover crop on depleted soils."

Common vetch or Hungarian vetch, 40 to 50 pounds and one of winter barley or winter oats is a commonly accepted mixture for the Willamette valley. Austrian winter field peas appear promising as a cover crop. They apparently will make a little earlier spring growth than the vetch. One bushel of Australian peas with one bushel of winter barley, wheat or oats is a mixture that will be tried out in several orchards of the county this year. Various other crops are sometimes used but some legume crop is more to be desired if satisfactory growth can be obtained.

Cover crops should usually be seeded early in September. Barnyard manure, legume hay or straw with the latter supplemented with sulphate of ammonia would supply the needed material in the orchard but these are usually not available in sufficient quantities or it is impractical to use them.

Boy Dies as Result of Encounter with Tiger

Alfred Smith, a nephew of Mrs. F. J. Dietsch died last week as the result of a hand-to-hand encounter with a tiger in a Park zoo recently. Alfred had been reading the "Tarzan" strip in the newspapers and together with two of his boy friends endeavored to experience the thrills they were reading about. They climbed a twelve foot fence surrounding the zoo in order to reach the desired location.

The family were preparing to move to an adjoining town where the mother was to teach school when the accident happened.

Relatives fear that word of the boys death is apt to be fatal to Mrs. Dietsch's mother, Mrs. R. A. Burnett who is 73 years of age and has been residing at the Smith home, Mrs. Burnett no doubt will be remembered by Beaverton folks as she made her home with the Dietschs for almost a year.
