Why Julius L. Meier?

THE TIME HAS COME for a change in Oregon's political and economic affairs. It is time to place in executive chair at Salem a governor who has the independence, the courage, the integrity and the ability to bring about the successful execution of a comprehensive and constructive program of vitally needed reform. Future prosperity of the state and the welfare of its people depend largely on the man selected at the election to take over the reins of government in Oregon.

Without an aggressive, fearless executive of unquestioned integrity, the people of Oregon can hope for little from the state house during the next four years. These splendid qualifications can be found in Julius Meier, one of Oregon's leading business men, who was nominated independent candidate for governor at a state-wide mass meeting attended by 5,000 voters.

Mr. Meier brings into a political campaign a new type of candidate. He is primarily a business man. His interests have been far from the field of politics as he has built a mercantile institution second to none in the west.

Mr. Meier was drafted into this campaign. His business associate and intimate personal friend for 35 years the late Senator George W. Joseph, won the republican nomination for governor of Oregon on a platform of defiance to the power interests throttling state development. When he died before attaining the honors of state was about to confer upon him, before he had the opportunity to carry out the policies for which he had made an uphill fight for many years, the people of Oregon looked for a man to take up his fallen standard. The republican state central committee scrapped the Joseph platform and nominated their recent chairman. The supporters of Mr. Joseph were forced to look elsewhere for a man to carry on his principles.

They found that man in Julius L. Meier. The state which had been kind to him, in which he had built up personal success, the people of that state whose cooperation had contributed to his outstanding record, were in need of a man of courage and independence. His close friend for many years was gone but his work was unfinished. Julius Meier believed he owed a service to Oregon, its people and their late champion. He agreed to run.

The issues have been clearly defined. Of primary importance is the need for federal, state and municipal development of water power that cheap power may be made available for domestic and industrial use. The program of Mr. Meier's is being fought by lavish expenditure of funds for propaganda by the power interests.

There are many other principles for which he stands but in the forefront is his pledge of strict economy in public expenditures and a business government with efficiency the sole criterion for employment of public servants. Only a real business man such as Mr. Meier can make such a pledge and live up to it. It is more than words with him. The emoluments of the office mean nothing to Mr. Meier. He is in the race solely from desire to serve the people of Oregon and to carry out the principles of his lifelong friend.

The people of Oregon have offered to them in the candidacy of Julius Meier an opportunity to obtain as general manager of the state's business one of its outstanding business leaders. It is a most unusual offer to place in their hands the possibility of bringing into public service the same high degree of honesty, courage and efficiency which makes for success in private life. The future of Oregon depends on the voice of the electors November 4.—(Paid Advertisement, Meier-for-Governor Committee.)
