"Now, Mr. Fix-It" and "Santa Claus" were among the names affectionately given to Ray Charlton by intimate friends, for obvious reasons. This car full of young folks on their way to a neighboring town, however, thought they had him stumped, for the car seemed hopelessly delayed in a line of vehicles baffled by a washout ahead.

"Now, Mr. Fix-It" challenged Myrtle, when they found there was nothing to do but wait for the repairer to get the road passable; and another added, "Yes, Santa Claus, what are you going to do about this Christmas party? It looks as though we wouldn't get to the Merrill's until Christmas day is over."

"You folks just wait," said Ray, stepping out into the sloppy road, and disappearing behind the car at their rear.

When he returned, his friends laughed uproariously, for he was carrying a small spruce branch, a several red and green bundles. Fitting the fir branch into the cigarette holder of the car, he produced three miniature candles which he attached to the tree and lighted. Disappearing again, he came back, chanting, "Jingle-jingle-Ho, there! Make way for Father Christmas!" Re-entering the car, he distributed his gifts.

The girls uttered surprised exclamations on receiving dainty little boxes of face powder; two of the men had packages of cigarettes, and the one who didn't smoke, a handkerchief bearing his initials—all attractively wrapped in colored paper!

"Now," announced Ray—"music and dancing, and then refreshments," with which he produced a pocket comb and piece of paper for orchestra, and made them all rise and do gymnastic exercises to lumber and warm themselves. Then he passed a box of nutcake bars, sent by his California aunt, thanking his stars he had brought them along. The fun thus started kept up until the "Move on" signal really surprised them.

Once past the repaired washout and on their way, Marjell said: "Now, Santa Fix-It, tell us how you worked the magic."

"That was dead easy!" he laughed. "You can always find what you want if you look long enough. I'd noticed something green by the road, and after I'd munched along back a few rods, I found it was a little spruce tree. I couldn't pull it up, but my trusty blade severed a branch, and—there you are!"

"But the candles—and the cigarettes?"

"Yes, and the powder boxes, fancy paper and all?"

"I simply collected those from the cars back of us. One man was a salesman, with a case of those boxes. A woman in another car had a lot of little candles for her kid's birthday cake, and also some bright paper. The cigarettes are my own, just done up fancy-like, and the hanky it, too—it was just my good luck that the non-smoker of the bunch has an initial the same as mine. The woman with the candles let me into her car and helped me do up the packages. That's all."

"But enough," murmured Marjell, "to prove that the Christmas spirit is still alive."

HARVEST

By VERNE BRIGHT

There are other harvest here than starveling wheat; These acres yield another crop than corn— Men bind the sheaves of beauty to adorn A thought with golden flesh against the cheat Of time—There's something more than yellow grain To granary for winter. Farmers know, As they reap the fields of autumn before snow Strikes grievously a harvest less of pain And more of peace than any bin may keep . . . This crop will not pay tax on house and hold, Nor can it be exchanged for minted gold; But it will buy a dark untroubled sleep And fruited dreams, ere time's brisk hand has spread Men like sheaves on the meadows of the dead.

Did you ever eat one of those delicious 35c dinners at the White Hall Restaurant.
