RECKLESS LOVE

Complete Short Story

As I sit here and write this, I wonder how many girls would accept "blind dates" after having read the story that I am about to tell, sobbed out by a girl friend, and after having heard the same story from two attending physicians. If I didn't believe that it would make girls a little more cautious, I wouldn't take the time it would require to write this. Even as I write and think over the whole situation again, the goose flesh simply stands out on my arms.

I do not wish to mention the city in which this experience occurred. I shall only say that it was in a city where one of the finest state universities is situated. This girl's experience is the most talked of subject among the professional people of that city and of the people who were once her friends and those who are still fighting to help her.

I shall tell it as it was told to me, by the girl herself.

"Do you know what I heard about myself today?" she asked me as she entered the room and flung her coat over the back of a chair. I saw at once she had been crying.

"No. Tell me what it is?" I asked her anxiously.

"Well, the story now is that I have been bootlegging, and I've never tasted the stuff in my life! Her lips trembled and her eyes filled with tears. "Really," she added, "I wonder if it really is worth while to try and carry on?"

"Of course you silly goose; you have given your friends a test of their true friendship and loyalty. You still have many friends my dear and the doctors you know will fight for you. They have already proven their loyalty."

"I suppose," she continued you have heard the whole story. I've talked of it by spells. I nodded my head. I had heard but I wanted to hear it from her. "How many years have you been a registered nurse?" I asked her, hoping she would take the hint and tell me all.

NIGHTMARE RIDE

"Nearly three years," she answered promptly "and when this experience happened to me, less than two months ago, I was one of the head nurses at the—Hospital. I had made a very good friend of one of the boys serving his 'intern'. We were just good pals, had a lot in common and there was nothing that we would not have done for each other. So I thought nothing of it when Marshall asked me if I'd take a date with a friend of his who was in the city for the day. They had planned to spend the evening together, I think, for he said he was busy at the hospital and was rather disappointed. I told him I had a lecture to write up that evening that had to be ready for the next morning and must go home to write it up. He finally asked me to come out to the car and meet his friend, which I said I would be glad to do. The young man had a touring car and was a very nice looking chap. When I told him what I had to do, he asked me if I would get him another date. I said, 'No, it's after eight now, and I wouldn't call any of the girls this late. He then asked if I would consent to a little ride. I'll bring you back as soon as you want me to be promised. Go ahead Florence,' urged Marshall. 'It will do you good. You'll have plenty of time to prepare your lecture.'

"So I consented, climbed in and we were off. I urged him as we drove out into the country, not to go too far and reminded him of his promise. I finally persuaded him to turn back. About five miles out of the city he drove up a little lane and stopped. It was pitch dark and I couldn't see my head in front of me, but I think it led into a farmyard close by. Up to this minute I want you to understand he had not made a move or done one thing any girl could complain of. I was a 'fiddle nervous' because it was getting late, after 10 o'clock, and we were quite a way from the road. I finally remarked, 'This is not the way back.' He moved over, put his arm around me and said: 'Oh, no dearie, don't get excited. It's early yet. Aren't you going to give me a kiss?'

"No I'm not," I told him. 'I did not come out here to be kissed' and I tried to push his arm away, but he was too quick and soon was kissing me like a madman. I finally freed myself and cried, 'You fool, who do you think you are?'

"What do you think I brought you out here for?" he responded, and added, 'Take a cig!'

"I said, 'No, thank you, I don't smoke.'

"Again he commanded me 'Take one!'

"This I did, but I threw it out the side of the car as hard as I could throw it.

"Well, maybe you'll take a drink with me, then, eh?" he questioned, leaning so close to my face that I could feel his breath on my cheek.

"No, I won't. I don't drink, either," I told him.

He lifted two bottles of beer from the back seat, took out a pocket flask and began to mix a drink. He set one bottle in my lap. I took it and set it out on the side of the car. He fairly thundered! 'Don't you dare throw that away, you little fool!'

"I answered as calmly as I could. 'I didn't. It is sitting on the running board whenever you are ready for it.' When he spiked the bottle to suit himself, he turned to me and demanded that I drink. I refused and he grabbed me and held the bottle to my lips. I shut my teeth tight, and fought him. 'Well, he said 'I'll show you I'm a good sport and I'll throw it away,' which he did. Then he reached over me and picked up the second bottle. I hoped he would do the same with that, but he set it down between us and started the car. We sped homeward about a mile further and then suddenly, he slowed down, drew up alongside of the road and parked.

"You know," he said 'I think you, I'm going to spike this bottle—and are trying to make a fool of me make you drink!' He was pouring the whiskey into a bottle when he caught me making a move for the door.

"Drink!" he commanded. I fought for all I was worth and replied plainly that I would not drink. "By heaven, you will!" he yelled, and tried to force me until he had split some of it. He swore again, but finally gave up and drank the whole bottle himself. Then he turned on me, perfectly furious. "I'm going to make you pay, you little devil!" and he grabbed me, tearing my dress.

"I began to pray just as hard as I could pray, and I do believe Divine power and strength are given you at such a time for I did not know

I had such strength. Finally he took my right arm and pulled it over my shoulder until he threw it out of the socket. I thought I'd faint then, because of the awful pain. Then he began to choke me, for I was moaning and a car passed us, and he did not intend that I should scream for help. Another instant and I would have been gone, I know. But just a second of time to gasp for a breath, and I was the fighting devil again. Then he started to pound me. You see my eyes are still dark. He blackened both of them.

PATHS OF DANGER

She could not talk for a minute I sat fairly paralyzed while she gathered herself together, and then continued: "He decided, I guess, that we were on too public a highway and did his best to drive me back to the farm lane again. He started the car, to turn around, and then I leaped. I prayed as I did so, but I knew my strength would not hold out much longer, and better death than what might come. I hit the back of my head and I knew no more.

"When I came to, I was sitting in the back seat, and he was driving fast towards home. I was so weak and sick and in such a pain I couldn't think or act.

"Two other nurses and myself had an apartment and as he let me out I took the number of his car. I told the clerk to write it down and call a doctor, Dr. Harland. I had hardly reached my room when the bell boy called up to say that Dr. Harland was out of the city. I told him to call Dr. Addison. Then I got my clothes off some way and gave way to my nerves. I could not cry. I just sobbed and sobbed, and I couldn't stop. When Dr. Addison came he sat down on the bed besides me, asking me questions which I simply could not answer. Finally he noticed the finger marks on my throat, and throwing my head back to see what it was, he exclaimed 'My God, Florence! What has happened? Tell me!'

"I finally sobbed out the whole story. He walked the floor part of the time and spent the rest trying to soothe me so I could continue the story. My father is a doctor and he said he would send for my parents at once. They lived about seventy miles south of here. I did not want him to but he insisted that it was the only thing to do. Then he asked me if I could get into my clothes. He thought I should be taken to his office. He called another doctor for he wanted to give me a thorough examination. While I dressed he went downstairs and I found out the next day he called the county attorney out of bed and went up to the hotel for the night. He was, by the way, trying to get away, too.

"Dr. Addison finally came up, helped me into a coat and helped me down and into his car. After my examination the doctor drove me back to the apartment and stayed with me until I was quiet.

"My folks arrived next morning and I had to go with them and the
