HILLSBORO — More farmers in Washington county are using cover crops in their orchards than in any other Willamette valley county, says County Agent W. F. Cyrus. Increased size of fruit has resulted in many cases because of the improved vigor of the trees brought about by plowing under the cover crops, a practice which not only adds organic matter to the soil but prevents the loss of much plant food by leaching.

McMINNVILLE — Spraying with Bordeaux mixture has proved superior to dusting for control of walnut blight on the W. H. Bentley farm at Dundee this year, Dr. W. P. Miller, associate plant pathologist of the Oregon Experiment station, who carried on the blight control tests, reports excellent results from Bordeaux spray. He says success depends more on time of application than on the strength of the spray.

green blackberry, said to be far superior to the ordinary evergreen, is growing on the D. Harrington farm near Stayton. Mr. Harrington found the berry growing wild and has propagated and developed it. It has a much better flavor, either fresh or canned, than other evergreens, and has also far out-yielded the common variety this year. Dr. George Darrow of the Oregon Experiment station, who has made some tests with the new berry, which is known as the Delsweet, has advised that new plantings be made from this berry rather than the old type of evergreen.

OAKLAND—Oregon is now one of the two states west of the Rocky Mountains showing an increased production of turkeys this year over last, reports Herbert Byers, representative of the Northwest Turkey Growers' cooperative, who attended a meeting of the local cooperative here recently. He also reported that last year Oregon turkeys marketed rated second highest in quality in the 11 western states—those from Nevada being first.
