County Agent Notes

W. F. CYRUS, County Agent

Lowering the cost of milk production is possible through the use of more pasture for the dairy herd. Because of the usual long dry summer period suitable pasture is more of a problem here than it is in the irrigated sections or on the coast. Regardless of our climatic handicap greater use of pasture could be made in this section by using more alfalfa, red clover, grass mixtures and irrigated Ladino clover where the water is available.

Possible savings to be made from the use of irrigated Ladino clover have been told and retold. Some of the bottom lands of the county are too wet for this pasture crop. Canary grass will live all winter under the water and will only get thicker each year. A very good quality of pasture is supplied by this grass where most other grasses will kill out. On some of the moist soils such as our upland swales, where irrigation is not practical, a mixture of grasses will generally prove more satisfactory. For this purpose Red Top, Orchard grass, English Rye grass seeded at the rate of six pounds each per acre with about two or three pounds of either Ladino or Alsike clover makes a very satisfactory combination.

On the higher, better drained soils or hills a mixture of orchard grass, tall oat grass and English Rye grass seeded at the rate of six pounds each to the acre with two pounds of common white clover or Burr clover is proving satisfactory. If seeding is done in the spring it is necessary to prepare a seed bed. Canary grass can be seeded in the spring as the water leaves the land. A good time to seed is when the water is standing in puddles over the field. Hip boots or a diving suit may be necessary to get around at that time but it is also a good time to get the canary grass in.

The eighth grade people are leaving a memorial on the grade school premises and, at the same time, honoring the memory of George Washington by the planting of two trees. One is mountain ash and the other a Japanese cherry. The pupils collected funds for the purchase of these trees sent a committee to buy them and planted them Wednesday afternoon with much ceremony. Mr. Summers dug the holes, Mr. Phillips and the eighth grade boys set the trees, Supt. Metzler made a short talk and Dorothy Baldwin gave the presentation speech.

This week upper grade people are struggling with the last six weeks period tests for the year—the next tests will be the finals.

In the intermediate grades the pupils begin learning to make talks—usually in the form of stories of incidents but, sometimes—reports from reading and a portion of Friday afternoon is to be given over to the 5th grade, to biographical reports which will include statesmen, naturalists and social workers. Reports will be made by Richard Smith, Hisako Nagae, Ruth Jones, Veldon Boge, Jane Boswell, Elmer Lillegard and Ronald Knepper.

Fourth grade people are making booklets as an art project, these will be used to mount colored birds. Second grade pupils have also been making birds and have arranged them in a color chart in combination with color study.

As the year nears its end teachers are beginning to clinch the significant points of the year's work which in the first two grades means stress on number combinations. In a contest in the first grade Allen Lillard was the "high point man" with Margie Bosich second. In the second grade perfect papers in the 100 subtraction facts are a daily aim.
