City Sinks Into Tunnel

Villa Santo, Stefano, Italy—inhabitants fled in terror as buildings slowly slid from view into a pit that opened along the main street of the city. A dozen houses are a heap of ruins 40 to 50 feet below the street level and it is feared that other dwellings will follow them.

Engineers are drilling the surface of the earth to determine whether the entire city will drop into the labyrinth of old tunnels dug by the Romans 2000 years ago. The grotto has not been exploited but, apparently, extends far beyond the limits of the present hold, 70 feet in diameter and many homes are resting on only a thin crust.

The only warning of the sudden sinking of the surface came three weeks ago when a donkey, carrying a man, punched his hind legs through the surface of the street.

A hole suddenly widened and underground rumblings were taken as indications that further collapses are certain.

HILLSBORO—Low prices and the necessity of producing good yields of forage per acre and of providing green pastures during the dry summer months are causing more and more dairymen of Washington county to turn their attention to alfalfa says County Agent W. F. Cyrus.

DONALD T. TEMPLETON

Candidate for Republican Nomination For County Judge

It has always been, and will continue to be, my policy to co-operate so far as possible, with any organized movement for the reduction of taxes, or other matters of county welfare, that reflects the opinion of the people in general. I especially commend the Tax Reduction League on the interest it has shown in the management of county affairs and the aid and co-operation it has given the county court in the county wide movement to reduce taxes on real property.

"So Skinnem went bankrupt, eh? I hear that he let his creditors take the very coat off his back."

"Yes, but not before he had transferred his wallet to his hip pocket."

Practical Illustration

A youngster asked his father how wars began.

"Well," said the pater, "suppose America quarrelled with England and—"

"But," interrupted the mother, "America musn't quarrel with England."

"I know," he answered, "but I am taking a hypothetical instance."

"You are misleading the child," said the mother.

"No, I am not," he answered. "Yes you are."

"I tell you I am not! It's outrageous—"

"All right, dad," said the boy. "Don't get excited. I think I know how wars begin."—Boston Transcript.

Paternal Appetite

While visiting a friend living in a small suburban town recently I noticed that a fox terrier belonging to the family had a new litter of puppies.

I said to my friend's youngest brother: "Well, Bobbie, I see Mitzie has puppies." Bobby promptly replied: "Yes, and it's her third helping, too."

ETIQUETTE

One can cultivate personality by educating the mind to appreciate many interesting things, not for the purpose of showing off, but for the sake of improving and enriching it. A well-stored mind and a quick intelligence allow one to give out and take in much that helps in building character. A person's character is something like a person's handwriting, something which forms itself unconsciously, but one can give it at least a good model to form itself upon.

Outwardly courage, fine temper and the observation of good manners will give a man or woman the attributes most desired. Mannerisms if they are natural and become a part of a charming personality. If however they are affected, and this fact is always obvious, they are tiresome.

In the Great Smoky Mountain National Park, Tennessee, is a spring which discharges water for 7 minutes, and then remains inactive for 7 minutes—thus alternating continuously from an active to inactive state with clock-like precision.

TIN KEEPS THINGS PURE

SHOULD you chance to be awake one of these spring mornings and take a peep out of your window, you may happen upon an interesting sight. In the dim light of dawn you will probably see making its way slowly down your street, either a motor wagon or a horse-drawn vehicle which is the center of much interesting activity.

If the wagon is horse-drawn its propelling power acts without human direction. From a distance you will observe the horse linger before one house and then plug sturdily past two or three others. Sometimes he varies the monotony by resting a hoof on the curb and peering expectantly up and down the street in the vain hope that some early rising passer-by may be induced by this maneuver to give his cool nose the rubbing he would so obviously like.

A Busy Man

Whether the wagon is horse motor-drawn, its driver is a busy man—back and forth hearts bearing his burden of shining bottles into doorways and areaways, flashing his electric torch on house numbers and illuminating with its revealing glow dark passages and treacherous staircases lest he stumble with his precious load. This is the morning milk delivered to your door, pure and fresh for the family's use.

Probably, Mrs. Housewife, as look at the gleaming bottles on your kitchen table, you picture the milk traveling the fifty to one hundred miles from the dairy to your home in its present glass container. If you do, you are much mistaken, for the receptacle in which the milk was whisked through the night was not of glass but of tin—yes tin, just like the tin in which were packed the delicious peas which you had for dinner last evening, the shrimp which you have purchased for luncheon today and the slices of golden apricots which will ornament the birthday cake for Annette's party this afternoon.

Tin Does the Trick

If one had to decide what individual agency had most to do with preserving the purity of the milk which is the chief nutriment of sturdy little children and so important an article of adult diet, the conclusion would inevitably be—tin.

Beginning with the sanitary barns in which the cows are kept—tin or galvanized iron ventilators admit the current of fresh purifying air upon which the Board of Health is so insistent. In preparation for milking in the best dairies, the cows are cleaned and brushed. Then enter the milkers in their white uniforms and the milk is drawn into pails of block tin and transferred to tin containers to cool. These containers, the pails and the strainers as well are scrupulously cleaned and sterilized each time they are used.

are next taken by trucks and put on the trains. If the distance to go is short the tins, packed in ice, travel by freight, if long, refrigerator cars are used. Instead of tin containers, insulated tanks of steel, copper or tinned copper, glass-lined, are sometimes employed.

In the City

In the city the milk is poured into large tanks and pumped to the top floor of the plant, or conveyed there in the original containers. It is run through the clarifier which removes all visible dirt, pasteurized, and run into a cooler. When cold, it is transferred to the filling machine and then into the bottles which are delivered at your door.

The safe and sanitary cleanliness of tin is emphasized by the following quotation from "The Principles and Practice of Milk Hygiene," by Louis A. Klein—"All surfaces with which the milk comes in contact should be covered with tin."

In caring for the tin receptacles the same method as that adopted by the great canneries is observed—rinsing with cold water, then washing with soapy water, then rinsing and sterilization by live steam. In this way the milk arrives at its destination as pure and uncontaminated as do the delicious peaches of California, or the luscious slices of ripe Hawaiian pineapple that travel countless miles over sea and land safe from all the elements of deterioration in their sealed containers of hygienic tin.
