Sunday Night Supper

SUNDAY night supper is usually pretty cold sort of comfort. Nine times out of ten, it is a meal of left-overs, left as they are. And people are hungry for this meal. Most folks go for a ride Sunday afternoon, or bar-b-qing that, a good brisk walk—even a concert or a movie or a pleasant visit with friends gives one an appetite.

Real Food for Sunday Night

Why not some real food for Sunday night instead of a little of this and a little of that? Keep the left-overs until Monday and make something nice out of them—you can, if you will put a little time to it. For Sunday night choose something that is easy to prepare and good and substantial as well. Here's a little menu, for instance, which will awaken a lot of Sunday night enthusiasm:

Salad of Canned Sauerkraut with Sliced Bermuda Onions and French Dressing
Cheese Rarebit

With this serve as near beer as the law allows.

Rod Rarebit: Melt two tablespoons butter and two cups grated cheese, one-half teaspoon mustard, salt and paprika; stir till just melted. Add one-half cup milk or cream and one-half cup canned catsup; stir till smooth and hot. Avoid boiling, and serve at once on toasted crackers or toast with strips of bacon. Serves four.
