The Republican National Convention was dominated by friends of President Hoover, whose policies were generally accepted and praised although a fight on the floor broke out over the Prohibition plank.

The renomination of the President, an assured event, took place as expected, resulting in the usual staged demonstration by the delegates. Vice-President Curtis, about whose renomination there had been considerable discussion, secured a majority on the first roll call through a switch of one state's votes. The party ticket for this year offers the same candidates who went to victory in 1928.

The Party platform, as submitted by the Resolutions Committee, declared against resubmission of prohibition for retention or repeal, but provided for a vote of the states in conventions to determine how each state may deal with the liquor traffic, and subject to protection from the Federal Government to those states which desire to retain prohibition.

Militant Wets, led by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, and Senator Bingham of Connecticut, insisted upon a straight-out repeal declaration and the matter had to be settled on the floor of the convention, when the Wets proposed to substitute their plank for that of the Administration.

The usual routine organization of the convention was marked by the fight between contending factions of Southern delegations, where old-line political leaders attempted to prevent recognition of the Hoover-created organization of their states. The first decision of the National Committee repudiated the President's policy in the South and threw out the delegates from Mississippi and South Carolina that wore the Hoover tag.

Subsequently, the fight was carried to the Credentials Committee, where the Hooverites from South Carolina managed to reverse the National Committee and later took their seats in the convention. However, Perry Howard, veteran negro politician from Mississippi, won his fight against an all-white group, which had the Administration's backing. In the end, the Hoover policy was upheld in Georgia, Louisiana, and South Carolina, but the veteran politician scored a victory in the Mississippi decision.

The Republican platform endorsed Hoover leadership emergency loans to states for unemployment relief, cooperative farm marketing, revision of veteran's legislation to eliminate irregularities and effect economies, participation in the World Court and in international conference in the event of a threat against the Kellogg Peace Pact, an international conference on monetary questions, including silver, revision of the banking laws to protect depositors and the tariff to equalize advantages of foreign nations with depreciated currencies. It was undoubtedly a Hoover platform.

By a vote of 209-176, the House agreed to issue $2,400,000,000 in new currency to provide funds for the immediate payment of bonus certificates and while the former service men in the capital were jubilant over their victory, it was apparent that the bonus would not be paid. President Hoover had promised to veto the measure if it reached the White House, and the vote in the House was nowhere near the two-thirds which would be necessary to override his disapproval.

Just when Congress will adjourn continues to be something of an uncertainty as the two houses go into conflict on the national economy bill and the question of relief. The House has passed the Garner relief measure, ignored by the Senate which seems to be determined to stand for its own measure, including the $500,000,000 public works bond issue proposed by the Democrats and vigorously opposed by the President.

Whippet Dog Races Special Feature at "Happy Days" Celebration July 3-4

An impressive feature of the "Happy Days" celebration will be the patriotic exercises sponsored by the American Legion and other patriotic organizations. Promptly at 9:30 the morning of July 4th everything on the grounds will close while the band plays the "Star Spangled Banner." This will be followed by the reading of the Declaration of Independence over the public address system, and it will be heard in all parts of the grounds. The next will be the flag raising ceremony by the Boy Scouts when the Stars and Stripes will be raised to the top of the pole that is placed on the roof. A parade will then be formed and march to the patriotic grounds in the southeast corner of the Park where the program will be completed. Comfortable seats, platform, piano and decorations make this a most desirable place for the patriotic exercises. The Old Soldiers Drum Corps have been engaged for the day of the Fourth.

A special added attraction of this year's "Happy Days" celebration will be the whippet dog races. There will be nine heats on July 3 and 4. Whippet dogs are the fastest animals that run on four legs. An entry of note is that of Sir Syd, who has the world's record time for 200 yards, and is owned by W. Hyde of Garden Home. Other dogs entered in the race are Highland Laddie, Lady Wlabelle, Vivian Miller, Barnacle Bill, Coleen Moore, Skipaway Babe, Sir Ovaltine, and numerous entries from different cities in the northwest.

All committees have been appointed and practically all arrangements completed for one of the most entertaining celebrations ever held in Shute Park. There will be ball games between teams of the Tualatin Valley League, and also the American Junior League teams. The Queen's ball, which is the social feature of the celebration, will be held in the auditorium the night of July 2, promptly at nine o'clock and will be followed by dancing. The Temple eight piece orchestra of Portland, who played for the celebration last year, have been contracted for this year.

Voting for the queen will close promptly at 1:30 p. m. Tuesday, June 28. No votes placed in the ballot box can be counted after that time. As soon as the votes are counted the result will be announced. The one receiving the highest number of votes will be elected queen, and the four receiving the next highest number of votes will be the princesses.

Votes can be secured at most all of the stores in Hillsboro, Laurel, Cornelius, North Plains, Helvetia, Aloha and Reedville, or anyone can purchase them outright at the Chamber of Commerce.

Two New Ordinances Introduced by City Attorney of Beaverton

Beaverton, Oregon, June 27.—Due to the annual school election being held Monday evening, the adjourned meeting of the city council was called to order until 10 p. m. City attorney Myers presented two ordinances, one in regard to the issuing of refunding improvement bonds, the other provided for the amending of ordinance No. 136, concerning the contract with Mr. Polsky to furnish the city water. Many changes were made and introduced into an ordinance No. 137, which was voted on and will be brought up for a third and final reading at the next regular meeting. Owing to the lack of important information the ordinance referring to the refunding bonds was held over for completion.

Receipt for Cash Drawn at Bank Eliminates Tax

The "Revenue Act of 1932" requires that every bank on and after June 21, 1932, and until July 1st, 1934, collect 2c for each check, or order for payment of money charged to a customer's account. The act also provides that this charge shall be collected and remitted monthly to the Federal Government.

There isn't any tax, however, on savings account withdrawals or when the depositor calls at the bank and issues a receipt for cash from his checking account instead of a regular check.

The Bank of Beaverton, a Member of the Federal Reserve Bank, will be glad to explain this new law in detail at any time.

Remarkable Improvement Noted in New Ford Truck Says C. J. Bielman

Remarkable improvements have been made in the Ford trucks which will bring a new measure of economy and efficiency, as well as driver-comfort, to commercial haulage, according to Mr. Bielman, Ford dealer at Beaverton. The new trucks are being exhibited by Mr. Bielman today, and continuing throughout next week. Local business men are expected to visit the showing in large numbers, attracted by the news that the new truck embody as many improvements as do the New Ford passenger cars.

The new trucks have an economical 4-cylinder engine, producing a maximum of 50 horsepower. Real springs are now semi-elliptic, and provide a support for the frame 2 1/2 inches back of the rear axle. This minimizes frame distortion on even the roughest roads and under heavy loads, which means that the body will last longer.

The coupling shaft, which links the transmission with the drive-shaft now is of tubular construction, 2 inches in diameter, with large forged steel splines. There is a universal joint at each end A hinged partible coupling makes it possible to remove the shaft easily and quickly if necessary for service.

The drive-shaft likewise is a steel tube, also 2 inches in diameter, with large forged steel splines. It revolves in double roller bearings. In the rear axle the outstanding Ford principle of the straddle-mounted pinion is retained, with a bronze thrust plate, which together maintain alignment of ring gear and pinion. Reinforcing webs are to be noted in the axle housing, and new double roller bearings in the rear hubs, under the load center.

Brake drums now are made of cast alloy iron, which tests indicate do not easily score. They are also resistant to warping under heat or break pressure.

The new frame has a number of important features. Its width, depth and strength provide ample support for bodies. Back of the cab, the side members are parallel, which greatly facilitates the mounting of bodies of different types. The frame is low, which makes it convenient for loading from a platform or from the curb.

There are two chassis wheelbases available and in addition, the special Standrive chassis and the commercial car chassis. Many different body types, fitting any business, are available for these chassis. In addition to fine appearance, an air of great strength, power and stamina pervades the entire line, and speaks volumes for the service the new trucks may be expected to give local business men.

CLAIMS TAXES TO INCREASE WITH COLLEGE MERGER

John E. Burdette of McMinnville, president of the Oregon Tax Equalization and Conservation Leagues and opponent of the proposed bill to merge the two institutions of higher learning of the state, has no intention of allowing himself to be "muzzled" by sponsors of the measure or other persons, he declared to the press last week.

Mr. Burdette's statement was made in reply to a threat made by John Ramage, member of the executive committee of the Marion county tax league, sponsors of the proposed measure, that the school consolidation organization would throw its influence against Governor Meier's tax reduction program which Burdette is sponsoring, unless he would cease attacking the school bill.

"When the time arrives that I will permit myself to be muzzled it will be time for slow music and flowers," Burdette was quoted as saying.

Burdette declares that he is personally opposed to the school-merging bill on the grounds that it will add heavily to state expense and result in increased taxes rather than economies. Aside from this personal viewpoint, Burdette's chief reason for opposing the bill is due to the fact that the Marion county organization has so twisted its name as to make it appear that the school bill has the support of the state league.

He denounced this deception before the state supreme court as one of the opponents of the bill seeking to have the ballot title changed to more nearly represent the intentions of the bill's backers, and declared that the state league has no sympathy with the measure.

The supreme court changed the ballot title from "Bill moving, consolidating and changing state institutions," to read "Bill moving, establishing normal and law school, establishing junior colleges. The court maintained that the word "consolidating" was argumentative on the ground that the bill provided for five campuses, the same as at present. The phrase, "changing state institutions of higher education," was declared insufficient.

The change in ballot title will necessitate a new start in obtaining names for the initiative measure. The names of 17,888 voters must be on the petitions by July 7, in order to place the measure on the ballot. Opponents of the measure are seeking to thwart the getting of names by giving as wide distribution as possible to the true nature of the bill which they claim will cost the taxpayers upwards of $6,000,000 rather than save, as the bill's backers claim. The opponents base their claims on the following facts:

1 That the bill, if passed, would wreck the new unified system which the state board of higher education has outlined to go into effect July 1, with a saving of upwards of $1,000,000 annually.

2 That states maintaining consolidated institutions pay on the average $60 more per student each year than where state universities and colleges are separate.

3 That the proposed measure will necessitate an immediate expenditure of several million dollars to adequately care for the shift of students to the Corvallis campus, and that students who are now dependent on part-time or full-time work in a combined population of 27,000 would, under the school-moving bill, be forced to seek employment in Corvallis, a city of 7,500 population.

4 That it will destroy millions in property values in Eugene, Monmouth, Ashland and LaGrande and create untold hardships on persons forced to move from these centers to other congested districts, where they will be forced to buy new homes at considerable personal loss.

5 That the bill does not provide for reducing the millage of 204 for higher education, and that taxes would not be reduced.
