FARM RELIEF BILL PROTECTS FARMER FROM ALL ANGLES

President Roosevelt Has Built an Astounding Record in Month

The end of the first month of President Roosevelt's Administration finds him retaining the unexpected national popularity which has been expressed in many ways. Following his party platform and his own campaign pledges, the President has met with unusual success in securing favorable congressional action. Of course, no one expects the present condition to continue indefinitely, and before long there is certain to develop some opposition and resentment, even among members of his own party. However, Mr. Roosevelt has exhibited amazing qualifications for dealing with politicians and his strategy has been flawless.

During the first month, and in line with his party's platform, the following developments demonstrated an intention to carry out the declared policies. The platform advocated "immediate and drastic reduction of government expenses" and this has proceeded to the point where Budget Director Douglas predicts a saving of about $900,000,000. Direct relief to states where unemployment has crippled local relief was promised and the Wagner bill authorizing $500,000,000 if needed, has been passed.

The farm relief measure, still a matter of much dispute and frankly a new path, is in line with platform pledges and campaign promises. Another plank provided protection for security buyers and this is in progress with regulations for public utilities and stock exchanges looming in the foreground.

The platform promised repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and it is now before the states, and beer is available already in many states. The platform declared against "economic isolation" and Secretary Hull is busy daily in conferring with foreign envoys, looking to the restoration of trade agreements.

Observers of the President find him smiling and cheerful, and no longer is there a suggestion that his campaign smiles were indicative of an "ignorant optimism," because the President shows every indication of enjoying his job and no reluctance whatever to taking action on grave and pressing problems. He finds life agreeable, having triumphed over tremendous physical and political obstacles and apparently, seems confident of his power to satisfactorily meet those that still lie ahead.

In sending his special message to Congress, urging enactment of legislation to aid in refinancing farm mortgages, President Roosevelt declared that he wished to extend the same relief to the small home owners of the nation and that he would also ask Congress for legislation to "initiate reciprocal tariff agreements to break through trade barriers and establish foreign markets for farm and industrial products."

The purpose of the Administration bill to refinance farm mortgages is to secure equitable readjustment of the debt, a reduction of interest rates a readjustment of principal payments so as to give farmers sufficient time to work out of their present difficulties and thus secure ultimate free ownership of their land. Together with the legislation intended to raise commodity prices, the new bill is intended to "enable farm debtors to pay their indebtedness in commodity terms, more closely approximating those in which the indebtedness occurred.

Briefly outlined, the bill would aid the farmer in securing a lower rate (four and one-half per cent); prevent immediate foreclosures; possibly reduce excessive principal indebtedness; refinance indebtedness of drainage, levee, and irrigation districts; permit direct loans to avoid bankruptcy and close-outs by unsecured creditors; to extend obligations, redeem foreclosed property and provide operating capital; increased borrowing power of farm loan associations.

The mortgage-holder would be given four per cent land bank bonds in exchange for unpaid farm mortgages; relieved from real estate taxes on property involved in receiverships, and to give indirect backing to mortgages to the limit of fifty per cent of the normal value of mortgaged property.
