Garden Soils Require Humus Materials, says Winifred Mikscke

Garden Soil requires an extra good portion of humus material, this humus should consist of good, well rotted manure, leaf mold, decayed vegetation or peat moss.

A soil containing a sufficient amount of humus allows for good drainage of soils that require it and in soils that have a tendency towards dryness, humus material is more than ever essential because it holds moisture added to it, either by nature or thru irrigating or sprinkling.

Humus allows your soil to be worked earlier, attains the proper degree of temperature for germinating seed placed in it, and as well it has a natural affinity for plant foods. Humus will gather the plant food elements and feed them off to growing vegetation as these elements are required.

Too much stress cannot be placed on the addition of humus materials in the garden soil. I feel that outside of the humus that is essential to proper growing and assured success in your vegetable and flower garden, plant food in the form of a completely balanced fertilizer stands in a position of absolute necessity.

You can now purchase a reliable fertilizer for gardens, lawns and flowers that has the proper balance of each of the essential plant food elements for a sum negligible, when results are taken into consideration. There are many commercial fertilizers on the market today that are a boon to the amateur gardener. The cost of application is slight, running from twenty cents a hundred square feet up.

When I say a proper plant food I mean a combination of the three essential plant food elements nitrogen, phosphate and potash. Do not make the mistake of using either of these elements alone on your lawn, garden, or flowers. Use them only in the proper combination.

Republican Postmasters To Complete Terms

Notice has been given job-hungry democrats by Postmaster General Farley that efficient republican postmasters will not be supplanted until their terms have expired.

Turning his back on the policy of "to the victors belong the spoils," Farley said the party long had nurtured the civil service system of competitive examinations and declared "this administration will not abandon that high ground."

To several thousand republican postmasters still in office and to many times that number of democrats who want jobs, Farley gave this message in a formal statement:

"No incumbent whose term has not yet expired and who has been rendering loyal and efficient service to the government, need have the slightest fear of removal. It will be the policy of the postoffice department to fill out his term."

Postmasters are appointed for four years and some republicans thus will remain in office until almost the close of the Roosevelt administration.

Farley said there "has never been the slightest basis" for reports that the administration intended to abandon civil service examinations in selecting eligible candidates for postmasters.

At the meeting, April 12th, there were fourteen scouts, three leaders and the chairman of the troop committee present. The matter of changing the meeting night was discussed and it was decided to hold the meetings on Tuesday night, hereafter.

As an additional attraction for this summer's work the leaders have decided that when ever any scout does something in scout work that is outstanding he will be dubbed some appropriate Indian name.

The Scoutmaster also issued an order to two of the slow scouts, who have been tenderfoot for a long time, making them become second class by the next court of honor.

At the following meeting, April 18, there were eighteen registered scouts, three leaders and the chairman of the troop committee.

The senior patrol leader had charge of the meeting. Patrol corners were held followed by a test period. Games were then played and announcements were made.

The leaders then held a short meeting to discuss troop problems.

ADMINISTRATION TO SCRAP TARIFF POLICY

Delegations From Eleven Nations to Gather at Washington, D. C.

Statesmen from eleven leading nations of the world are now gathering in Washington in response to the invitation of President Roosevelt, which definitely indicates that his Administration plans to turn away from the economic nationalism of the Republican administrations of the past twelve years. Separate discussions with the eleven nations, it is hoped, will bring world public sentiment to bear on the difficult problems and thus pave the way to success for the World Economic Conference to be held in London.

It is quite plain that President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull plan to scrap the tariff policy of former administrations and to make an effort to revive international commerce so that all countries, including the United States, may profit from mutually beneficial exchange of goods. Holding that the United States led the world in economic nationalism and commercial isolation, the Administration is firmly convinced that this nation should cooperate in putting the world on its feet again.

Secretary Hull characterizes as antiquated the contention that a more liberal policy will flood this country with the products of cheap foreign labor to the detriment of American labor, and he points to the 13,000,000 wage earners in this country who have been thrown out of employment under the operation of the highest tariff in our history. Mr. Hull insists that it is suicidal for nations to be fenced off from each other and that isolationist policies developed in the past ten years should be modified.

He hopes that the nations will agree to the exchange of their surpluses, pointing out that the international trade of the world has dropped from $50,000,000,000 to less than $20,000,000,000 per year. He thinks that the share of the United States in this field should be around $8,000,000,000 and that our surplus automobiles, wheat, cotton, machinery, oil, copper coal and the like should be sold abroad. By selling the farm surpluses in other countries, agriculture would be put on a better basis, the farmers would be able to buy and millions of wage earners would be given employment through the markets created for our manufactured products.

This, in brief, is the argument of Mr. Hull and inasmuch as it is the firm intention of the Administration to proceed along this line, the writer of this column deems it important for all Americans to understand the new attitude. Other questions will be discussed at the various conferences to be conducted when the representatives of Great Britain, France, Italy, Germany, Japan, China, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico and Canada sit down with President Roosevelt and his advisors.

It is probable that the range of discussion will cover the entire world economic situation, including war debts, tariff policies, exchange problems and methods of international cooperation, particularly in regard to disarmament. Restoration of the price of silver and control of wheat surpluses are certain to be included in the topics discussed.

It will be remembered that the Hoover Administration approved the Economic Conference scheduled to be held in London, but would not agree to discuss tariffs or war debts. The present Administration is apparently willing to trade war debts advantages for adjustments of tariff regulations which work to our disadvantage.

Mr. Roosevelt is not moved by any intention "to save the world" but rather to secure something for the United States first and the world in consequence. He has no intention of giving the world a lot of advice and some national concessions in return for no advantages. He feels that it is impossible for this country to sell its goods abroad while shutting its market to other nations and that reciprocity in trade is absolutely necessary because other nations cannot pay for our goods unless they are able to send us goods in return.

Amid the rush of proposed legislation, it is becoming gradually clear that departmental cuts and reorganizations will be more drastic than were suspected at first. Whole bu-
