AAA Waste

More fruits and vegetables and foods not included in the meat list are now used in the average American household than in any previous period. Housewives, in attempt to keep down the grocery bills, are turning to purchases to which they have been forced by the theorists in charge of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, commonly or alphabetically known as the AAA.

In seeking to solve the problems of the corn, wheat and cotton growers and the producers of pigs and cattle, the New Deal brain trusters paid scant heed to economy or experience. They reduced the pig population by approximately 9,000,000—among which were several million sows approaching motherhood—through the effective process of the leaden bullet. As a result the price of pork doubled within the short space of a few months, and the housewife paid the bill.

Drouth swept through the mid-western states and left cattle starving by the thousands on the parched and barren ranges. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and his assistant, Rex Tugwell, lacking only the costumes of Santa Claus to vie with that gentleman as a bearer of gifts, and perhaps dreaming of the day when the livestock man might be a mere subject to their respective wills, purchased in the neighborhood of 8,000,000 old cows and culs of the herds that otherwise would have died on the range. Prices paid for old cows, worth in the markets about two dollars each, went as high as eighteen dollars. Many of these after government purchase and slaughter, were left as feasts for the vultures and buzzards, and the government paid the bill—this is spite of the fact that perhaps a few miles away a needy families, dependent at the time upon government relief, might have welcomed the best portions of carcasses for stews or soup.

Correspondence-school cowboys in Washington, who perhaps had gained their chief knowledge of the cattle business through the purchase of hamburger in the neighborhood butcher shops, sought to establish rules and regulations by which the cattlemen might be guided in the disposition of their surplus and worthless stock. The attempts of theory to guide experience did not succeed, and as a result the majority of the substantial cattlemen are not "sold" on the New Deal. Independent of nature, they desire to conduct their own business without the interference of amateur authority.

Government purchases of cattle were not made from everyone engaged in the industry, but from those who had signed to permit the agricultural department to regulate their businesses not only during the emergency but "hereafter." The whole thing was apparently an effort on the part of Wallace and Tugwell to gain a strangle hold on the cattle industry and place it under a great governmental bureaucracy.

If the reader desires to study a rather graphic article describing the attempts of the government to deal with the cattle situation on the drought areas read "The Hamburger Bonanza" in the Saturday Evening Post" of May 4, 1935.

Hopkins

It must have been embarrassing for Harry L. Hopkins, federal relief administrator when recently, in Washington, it was revealed that $60 a month was being paid to Commonwealth College of Mena, Arkansas. This institution is a training school for Communist agitators.

When questioned relative to the fund, Mr. Hopkins is said to have placed the blame for the monthly payment upon the shoulders of the state relief officials of Arkansas. Later, however, it was learned that the expenditure was authorized in Mr. Hopkins's office.

Commonwealth College was founded by Kate Richards O'Hare, radical agitator, who served a term in the Missouri state prison during the world war, for radical activities. It was at first financed by the communist controlled Garland fund, but since 1928 has been sustained by donations from extreme socialists and communist sympathizers.

A dance will be given at St. Anthony Auditorium, Tigard, Thursday evening, June 27th. Admission 25 cents. Everybody welcome. A good time assured.

State House Gossip BY ERNEST L. GRAY

By the way, this strike is "right down his alley", and it looks bad for any who might say him "nay". The Governor has been in the army too long to look upon intimations lightly. He gives orders as one with experience, and leave it to Charles P. Pray, superintendent of state police to carry them out. They both "speak the same language", when it comes to law violators.

The only political gossip the past week has been the balloons sent up by prospective candidates for attorney general. State Senator James Chinnock was at the capitol this week. He is outwardly announcing his candidacy to take the place held for the past quarter century by I. H. Van Winkle, attorney general. And he has his line of talk already prepared.

Chinnock, among other things, will say that he can handle all the state's legal business with the present staff—that is as to size—of the attorney general, without the necessity of many departments hiring their own attorneys. He also states he will employ attorneys who have practiced at the bar.

His latter remark was provoked by what he states is a fact, with one exception, that of Ralph Moody. All the other attorneys in Van Winkle's office he says, have not had actual practice in court.
