Goodsman Concrete Vaults

The local undertaker of Beaverton handles this company's vaults. So popular are the concrete vaults today that in some parts of the nation forty per cent of burials are being made in them. One firm in Chicago manufactures 12,000 a year. Call TRINITY 8329 at 5711 N. E. Fremont, Portland, and they will gladly give you information concerning them and the lowering device.

There is something of beautiful tragedy around the modern burial service. Flowers, a magnificent casket, funeral music and the stately burial service. But all this becomes ugly tragedy if we have to realize that in a few days or few weeks the elements will destroy all that which we reverence and which now lies under the sacred soil of the grave. But this need not be. The Goodsman Concrete Vault, manufactured by this firm allows the beautiful memory of the last service to be unspoiled by the thought of destruction of the elements. This enterprising company has been one of the leaders in the manufacture of element proof burial vaults. They have been introduced in this community and no funeral service here is considered complete unless the casket is lowered into one of these waterproof vaults.

Friends watching the beautiful oak or mahogany casket lowered into the grave have the satisfaction that if that vault were opened twenty years hence, that casket and its sacred content would be untouched and unharmed by the elements. Just as the memory of the loved one will remain immortal, so will the earthly remains rest untouched by the subtly devastating water and dust of the grave.

Funeral directors all over the country are now realizing the desirability of advising the use of these vaults. They know that anything which will console and lessen the bereaved in the time of sorrow is worth while.

Thus the course of modern progress goes on. We are preserving the sacred traditions of the race started by the ancient Egyptians thousands of years ago. We are preserving the memory of our loved ones by insuring that those sacred remains will rest forever in peace—undisturbed, untouched. The contemplation of this is beautiful.

The members of this well known concern are men of high business standing and they take their place as community servants. They recognize that their business success only adds to their obligations to the community.
