Statehouse Gossip

By ERNEST L. GRAY

Following an organization picture which was the closest and most complicated in recent history of the house of representatives, the Oregon legislature started into work on a program involving a new capitol which was expected to be a bitter battle, both as to cost of structure and the site.

The senate chambers, surrounded by the mirrored walls and with mirrored pillars on the floor, aroused the vanity of some of the senate and the demand was made to eliminate the looking glass feature so the senate wouldn't be talking to their own faces. This was done.

But the dining room of the Marion hotel, which is the senate chamber, is plenty small and the ventilation none too well, but for temporary quarters it is proving convenient. The house located in the armory, is of course very much better, and except for more noise, is larger and more convenient than that in the old capitol.

Under these conditions the special session of the Oregon legislature this time will make real history and if successful will build a monument or erect a mistake which will always be traced to them. The governor in his message urged action on nothing more than the capitol bills, and naturally vetoed bills must be brought up.

Spectators for the senate do not fare well. There is room for about fifty persons only, but the house has room on both the floor and the gallery. Plenty of room for on-lookers, and rightly so there, because it is in the house where the show is put on, if the first few days are any indication.

Senator James H. Hazlett introduced the first bill in the senate and had his measure on the R. F. C. Mortgage fee exemption on the desk before 10:30 the time the session was to meet. It was not formally introduced however, until after organization was effected and the session got under way.

Contests for seats, which developed in both houses, were the first in the past sixty years in the legislature, at least as far as old timers recall. It delayed considerably the usual formal organization at the opening of the sessions. Other organization matters are ironed out in the caucuses.

Three times during the Sunday night caucus of the house some member evidently voted twice in the secret ballots, for three times there was one more vote cast than members present, thereby voiding the election. In fact the house caucus proved a good show and well worth the time spent far into the night, but if it continues it may well become monotonous.

The way things are starting out it is beginning to appear as if the special session will not accomplish much in the limited 20 days. But all the work is done within the last few days of any session, so one can only wait and see. In the meantime the governor has said he would not call a second session.

One day at least may be missed. The younger members anyhow are anxious to adjourn for Saturday of this week to give committee a chance to work. But the real reason is that there will be a good football game in Portland, and one can't let business, particularly state business, interfere with pleasure, ahem.

Despite the lack of administrative sanction, two social security acts were brought into the senate hopper the first day, but were brought in individually by Senator Alan Bynon who stated they were not social security acts. He contended however they are emergency measures and should be acted upon by the extraordinary session.

One would reduce the age qualifications for old age pension from 70 years to 65. The state law now is set at 70, and this act would bring it down to the federal provisions. This will be done eventually so Bynon did not wait. It was expected a similar government bill also would be introduced.

The other bill will be good news for counties if it passed. Under the present old age pension law the counties and the state must match the federal government's contribution 25 per cent each as against the government's 50. This would be changed under the new act to place the entire responsibility upon the state, thus relieving the counties of any matched funds.

There appears to be more people in the press gallery at this special session than at any previous regular or special. Just what this is indicative of was hard to state, unless newspapers over the state are educating readers to become more politically minded as far as governmental matters are concerned.

At any rate in addition to the regular staffs of the standard papers and press associations, there are more special writers, and more photographers. And for the first few days the

First in Series of Poultry Meetings Held at Beaverton

"Maintaining the body weight of the pullet is the most important factor in holding pullets up in production," stated H. E. Cosby, extension poultryman of the Oregon State College, at the Washington county poultrymen's meeting held in Beaverton high school, Tuesday, October 22, at 8 p. m., according to L. E. Francis, assistant county agent.

Cosby commented that pullets should be expected to gain from a quarter to a half pound in weight after they have been placed in the laying house. In order to provide for this increase in weight it is necessary to feed sufficient amounts of grain and mash to provide for both egg production and increase in weight. It is a very desirable plan to have several birds in a flock marked so that they can be weighed at least once a week as a check on how the flock is holding up.

Careful observation of the flock with regard to the activity and appetite of the birds and the amount of feed they are eating is another very good step towards maintaining production.

In addition to a discussion on the problem of keeping pullets up in production, Mr. Cosby discussed certain various matters of legislation that were of interest to poultrymen. He pointed out that it is going to be vital to the poultry industry that the poultrymen become better organized in order that they can successfully back legislative measures that are vital to the industry. At the present time prices of eggs have increased to the point where the foreign producer is able to import eggs, pay the tariff and still afford to compete on American markets with the American poultryman. Egg importations in recent months have increased to the point where they are becoming a serious consideration.

Another point discussed by Mr. Cosby was the breeder's and hatcherymen's code. In this discussion he pointed out that while the code itself was killed by the decision of the Supreme Court with regard to the NRA that it has left its influence with regard to a spirit of fair trade and advertising in breeding and hatchery business.

Following Mr. Cosby's discussion, Fred H. Cockell, Milwaukie, Oregon, recommended to the poultrymen that they pass a resolution expressing their appreciation to Senator Frederick Steiwer for the support that he gave the poultry industry in the recent session of Congress. R. L. Rockwell and Frank Erickson were appointed as a committee of two to draft this resolution and send it to Senator Steiwer on behalf of the Washington county poultrymen.

This was the first of a series of monthly meetings which are held at the Beaverton High School on the fourth Tuesday of each month at 8 p. m. Anyone interested in poultry raising and its problems is welcome to attend. Notices of each meeting are sent out. Persons desiring to receive such notices should leave their name and address at the county agent's office.

Male Singers Wanted

Those desiring to sing in the Washington County Townsend quartet send in your name. We need strong voices as follows: First tenor, first tenor and second tenor and baritone. Earl E. FISHER, Beaverton, Oregon

Two Whoppers!

Your correspondent was visiting at the home of George Newman on Cedar street, Beaverton, Sunday, and overheard a talk on corn. We believe that George Newman and Bob Medill are headed for the state championship. Medill said "while down in Texas his cow was eating corn of the cob—the sun became so hot, the corn began to pop—the old cow thought it was snowing and froze to death!"

Then Newman said—"back in Ohio when he was a boy planting corn with a span of mules—one mule died in the center of the corn patch, so they buried him right there and stuck a rake handle in the ground to mark the place and finished planting corn. That fall they harvested six bushels of corn on the same spot and there were three ears of corn growing on the rake handle!"

REPORTS HOUSE ROBBED

Harry Parker, of near Beaverton, reported Tuesday that his home had been entered. Among articles taken were two rifles, which were used in the Civil War, a single shot 22 calibre rifle and a shotgun.

LOUISE GILSDORF

Sister Mary Sophia (Louise Gilsdorf) died October 19 at St. Vincent's hospital at the age of 24 years. Requiem mass held Tuesday October 22 at St. Mary's of the Valley with interment in their private grounds. W. E. Pegg in charge of arrangements.

Good Demand for Vegetables

Past two weeks Messrs Tobin, Blythe and Jones have been busy selling vegetables on the East Side market, Portland. They report demand good for lettuce, bunch beets and turnips.

YOUNG HUNTER

Jack Marsh lows as how he can knock the whisks off a gnat at 10 paces with his 25-35 Winchester carbine, and that's something for any six-gun specialist of the Old West, let alone a 13-year-old Beaverton boy. Jack, who isn't much taller than the gun he packs, brought down a seven-point, 200-pound mule deer in the Ochoco mountains this season—dressed him cleanly through the heart.

A Hundred Local Students Attend Game at Corvallis Saturday

About one hundred students from the Beaverton high school attended the game Saturday night at Corvallis. Mr. Metzler made two school buses available and students, who wished to attend were charged twenty five cents round trip.

The football team lost to Corvallis high 7-0. Corvallis made the touchdown in the first half. Those on the starting line-up for Beaverton were: Wheeler, left end; B. Sipe, left tackle; Hogan, left guard; Replogie, center; Hetu, right guard; D. Sipe, right tackle; Bielman, right end; Klein, left half; Berry, right half; Emmons, fullback; Barron quarterback.

Miss Whitlock was absent from school Friday, October 18, because of the illness of her father. His condition is reported improved.

There was a special student body meeting Friday, October 18, for the purpose of arousing interest for the Corvallis game. Mr. Metzler announced buses would be sent if enough students would go and the charge would be twenty five cents round trip. The students were disappointed when Mr. Zumwalt and Mr. Warren did not give them the much-awaited-for song.

Former students of Beaverton high school have shown thorough preparation in high school English by records made in Oregon State college English entrance exams. Those teachers instrumental in their training were Miss Geraldine Sanford, Mrs. Georgia Snyder, Miss Amarette Barne, and Miss Mary Martha Sweeney.

The students competed with those from larger schools such as Corvallis, (whose record was the highest) Jefferson, Grant, Astoria, Franklin and Medford.

Ballots on Corn-Hog Program to be Cast Saturday at Hillsboro

By their votes on Saturday, October 26 hog producers of Oregon and all other states will reveal to national officials of the AAA whether or not there is enough interest and demand for a 1936 corn-hog program to justify such a program. Such is the word sent out to extension officials in Oregon and elsewhere by Claude R. Wickard, chief of the AAA corn-hog section.

Every county in Oregon in which a corn-hog control association was formed has provided a polling place which will be open all day Saturday from 8 o'clock in the morning to 10 o'clock at night. In Washington county the polling place is at the county agent's office, Courthouse, Hillsboro.

All operators and owners of farms which produced corn or hogs in 1935 may vote in the nationwide referendum, whether they signed 1934 or 1935 contracts or not, the local corn-hog committee announces. Each eligible person is entitled to only one vote regardless of the size of his operations, the number of farms handled or their location.

Printed ballots have been distributed and these are to be deposited personally when possible, though sealed mail ballots with the voter's signature on the outside of the envelope will be accepted where the grower cannot cast his ballot in person.

In voting a grower merely votes yes or no on the question whether any Washington last month at which farm for 1936. It is not a vote on a particular plan, nor does one's vote bind him to sign or not to sign in case a program is developed.

The referendum is the second step by Washington officials in deciding on the future of corn-hog adjustment. "The first was the national hearing at Washington last month at which farm leaders urged a new program which would allow for expansion next year of hog production while holding a check on corn production.

The farm representatives argued that the stage is set perfectly for a serious over-production of corn because of the drought-reduced livestock herds. This, according to past experience, will be followed by too many hogs raised in 1937 on cheap corn, bringing a return of 3-cent hog prices as in 1933. Packers, on the other hand, argued against continuance of any further control program, saying it would be against the best interests of both producers and consumers.

King Sells Place for $7000 Cash

W. H. King, prominent citizen of Beaverton, sold his beautiful residence on the Tualatin highway East of town last week for $7000, cash.

Will King has made his home at Beaverton since a small boy, when he attended the one room school at that David Purser's homes. For many years, as a young man, he worked in sawmills owned by Al Davies, Newton Davies and Greely Davies.

In other days "Bill" was some ball player on the Beaverton team—also if you have talked with him—you will note he is well posted on early day activities around his home town.

Mr. King has some valuable property in Portland, where he will reside in the near future. Still he was telling an old friend Wednesday, that he likes to be near Beaverton, the old home town, and his friends' second the motion.

New Auto Truck

After operating an old Ford truck all summer Al Pesenti claims "Old Henry" became balky—didn't want to go any more! So he traded him off for a new truck. Say boy! it's a dandy and it travels so well that Dario Casale like—2 to ride in the driver's seat.

10 Acres Wheat Per Day

These Indian summer days are OK for the farmers. At St. Mary's Tuesday Louie and Fred Kreiger and Adolph, the man who also referees football games at St. Mary's high—drilled 10 acres wheat and many days eight acres are seeded. At present writing they are sowing the big corn field—North one operates a tractor with gang plow—another drill, third man harrow—and 10 acres per day. Gong some!
