Official Washington has not yet recovered from its surprise—in some cases, almost amazement—at the calmness with which the nation as a whole received news of the AAA's invalidation.

The calamity howlers, as usual, had forecast that in the event of an adverse decision there would be immediate demands from one and all that the Supreme Court and the Constitution be junked. Are these prophets' faces red now?

There was, naturally, a limited amount of hysteria like that which followed the demise of NRA. But that was only the first reaction. After folks had time to think things over, the general attitude was: "What of it. That doesn't ruin the country."

Washington students of the public mind offered two explanations: First, that the AAA, like the NRA, did, was waning in popularity; second, that the people believed the American government structure to be one of checks and balances, each of which must be kept in its place or the whole edifice would fall.

The final analysis was that a year ago circumstances called the attention of the people to the Supreme Court and the Constitution and they decided then, as they did again this year, that the protection offered by the two should be maintained.

Some significant facts emphasized in Capital corridor and office talks were these: The country's forefathers established a three-way division of power—legislative, executive and judicial. They gave the executive as much power as two thirds of the legislature, through the veto. And they set up the Supreme Court to prevent misuse of both legislative and executive powers.

They made the court free from political influence by giving the justices appointive instead of elective office, and by putting no time limit upon their services.

And they gave the court no power to invade the citizens' rights. The court, for example, may not burden the individual with taxes nor reward him with appropriations; it has no patronage to dispense; it cannot call out the army and navy for its protection. All it can do is interpret the laws and rule out those which invade the sacred rights of others.

In sum and substance, the courts have power to protect others, but not themselves.

There was some talk, too, about the divided AAA opinion. Historians reminded, however, of the court's attitude in the past. It ruled, 5 to 4, that Congress could not forbid the shipment in interstate commerce of any goods, agriculture or industrial. A few weeks later, it industrial in the production of which persons under 16 had a hand. A few weeks later, it accepted its own verdict and held, 8 to 1 that Congress could not tax out of existence those who did ship such goods.

Such seemed the court's attitude on AAA. It held first, 6 to 3, that the AAA was unconstitutional; then it voted unanimously that those who had paid illegal processing taxes under AAA had a right to recover them.

Interest in Dairying Renewed PRINEVILLE—A good many cows from Crook county dairy herds have been sold to California buyers recently and farmers of the county are saving more heifer calves this year than they have for the past few years, reports County Agent E. L. Woods. Mr. Woods believes the latter fact shows that more farmers are becoming interested in dairying due to the increased sale for cows and the steady butterfat market.
