"Education" will Solve "Transient Youth" Problem, says Portland Teacher

Education is the solution of the "transient youth" problem in this country. John Kilpack of the Portland school system declared before 150 Washington county teachers gathered at the high school in Beaverton, for their first 1936 institute, thus Kilpack declared, teachers are at least partly responsible for solution of one of the nation's major problems.

Kilpack's remarks were included in one of two major addresses of the forenoon session of the instructors. Thomas H. Gentle, ex-Monmouth Normal teacher, now in the role of "gentleman farmer" near Monmouth, was the other speaker.

Gentle's address had to do with teaching methods and problems. He said he believed the world's economic and political problems injected into the studies of the high school student would provide a worthwhile stimulant to study for the average pupil.

The gathering, held during the forenoon only was a joint session of members and non-member teachers of the Washington County Teachers' association. Group meetings were held for high school, rural grade and elementary school principals. A musical program was furnished by Beaverton high school orchestra and the grade school glee club.

Tips on Fertilizer

not always a good thing. In any case where vetch either or seed or hay is pastured, an application of landplaster is almost certain to be an advantage. Where vetch and peas are planted on soils of high fertility and if growing conditions have been satisfactory, the use of landplaster is likely to be of very little importance, and in some cases its use may be a detriment as it causes excessive growing and consequent heavy lodging, late maturity and these things usually occur at the expense of seed setting. On land that is comparatively low in fertility, the use of landplaster is of considerable value. Whether or not this is to be used in peas and vetch is a specific individual farm problem. The vetch and pea seed grower should size up the situation and from his experience of crop yields on the same land together with a consideration of reasonable conditions determine if landplastering will be of benefit to his crop.
