Secret of Pre-Inca Dyes

Revealed in Mummy Packs Dye-stuffs and cosmetics of Paracas, old pre-Inca site in Peru, have been studied by a professor of industrial chemistry at Santa Fe university, Argentina. Rich textiles found in Paracas mummy packs rival the finest Old world tapestries. Because of their brightness after many centuries' burial in the earth, speculation was aroused as to coloring matters used. Ancient "elbow grease," that is to say, careful workmanship rather than miraculous dye-stuffs, account for the results, analyses disclose. In their descriptions of dyeing methods used by the Incas of Conquest times, who probably inherited their knowledge from people of Paracas and other predecessors, the Spanish monks enumerated ten good vegetable dyes in use, although most fact was also done with indigo and cochineal on naturally tinted llama wool. "In dyeing intermediate shades on cotton, one color was dyed over another to obtain desired tones. The Incas knew the use of mordants. Their textiles were the envy of the Spaniards.—Montreal Herald.

Various Streets Recall

Romance in Old London Romance is permanently enthroned in many an unpretentious London and suburban street, says a writer in Tit-Bits Magazine. Cade Road, Blackheath, marks the spot where Jack Cade, the notorious Kentish rebel, camped for a period with his ragamuffin battalion, armed with scythes and pitchforks. Nearby is Wat Tyler road, preserving an equally tenuous memory of the leader of the Peasants' Revolt.

Racing men's memories will be stimulated by Becher street, Notting Dale, which is named after Captain Martin Becher, founder of the famous Grand National jump. While cricketers exploring Kennington will feel a legitimate pride on discovering buildings named after such masters of their craft as Hornby, Key, Blythe, Kilner, and Lord Alverstone.

Gulliver Street, Rotterdam, commemorates a hero of fiction; two great soldiers have their names perpetuated by General Gordon place, Woolwich, and General Wole road, Blackheath; and the Harold estate, Bermondsey, is derived from a royal manor, held on this spot by King Harold before the Norman Conquest. These examples of street romance are taken from an L. C. C. publication.

Republicans Have Opportunity Again to Champion

Small Property Owners, the Truly "Forgotten Men" Under New Deal

By Nicholas Roosevelt For the National Republican Builders, Inc.

In contrast to the New Dealers who have been striving to stimulate class consciousness and hatred the Republicans have the opportunity of becoming once more the champions of the men and women of small property throughout the nation. This is at the same time a desirable goal, and a return to the principles of the original Republican party.

That party was not organized to serve the interests of the powerful financial forces of the East. Its roots were in the mid-west and its objective to protect the men and women of small property—the farmers, the small-town merchants and professional men and others who had a stake in the land—to protect them on the one hand from the land-holding aristocracy of the South and on the other from the masters of industry in the East.

These people of small means, the owners of small homes and small businesses, the farmers who work their own soil, are truly forgotten men of today. They include those who have been successful and have come through the depression with their heads still up and their confidence in American ideas, unshaken. They number not only the farmers who own their own land but the small merchants who have resisted the chain stores, the small manufacturers who have kept their businesses going and their people employed.

These are the true "backbone of the country"—and incidentally, of the Republican party. While these people, like the Democrats, recognize the dangers to America from the growth of big business, they differ from the New Dealers in that they refuse to believe that all big business is crooked simply because it is big, and that all big fortunes were built up dishonestly.

They believe in curbing crooked business, whether large or small. They recognize the dangers of entrenched greed. But they know that many men have come by their wealth honestly. These they would protect, just as they would punish those who have come by their wealth dishonestly. That the small property owners of the country form one of the most important elements, no thoughtful person will deny.

America was settled and made great not by a few business buccanniers and financial pirates who glorified in exploitation, but by the millions of hard-working men and women who came to these shores determined to improve their economic lot. The desire to own was strong in the settlers and immigrants, and they were not afraid to work hard. Today we should help them hold what they have acquired.

These people, as Herbert Agar has well shown in his book, "The Land of the Free" dominated the early history of America and still dominate its rural and small-town thought. They have built homes and reared families in the old American traditions.

Only in the last half century has the poison of the gambler's greed spread through the country—the desire to acquire vast fortunes in the belief that there was merit in the mere size of the fortune rather than in what was done with it. Story of Damon and Pythias Damon and Pythias were citizens of Syracuse and were great friends. Pythias was arrested and condemned to death by the tyrant Dionysius the Younger, but obtained permission first to go to his home to spend several days in arranging his affairs, on condition that his friend Damon would agree to remain as hostage and to suffer the penalty should Pythias fail to return. Pythias did not return at the time appointed, and Damon presented himself for execution, but expressed his unflinching belief that his friend had been unavoidably detained and would appear if humanly possible. The spectators, who pitied his credulity, proceeded to the place of execution. Pythias, having been detained, arrived on the scene and rushed through the crowd to take the place of Damon, who refused to give it up. Each determined to die for the other. The tyrant, himself present, struck with so great a friendship, pardoned both and begged to make the third in such a loyal alliance.

Most Terrible of Frontiers

The most terrible of frontiers is that between Rumania and Russia, where a broad belt of No Man's Land lies between the two countries, protected by barbed-wire fences. It is literally a dead line, for it is as much as any man's life is worth to attempt to cross it. Yet smugglers sometimes manage to do so, but whether by stealth or bribery it is hard to know. It is a capital offense for any Russian to leave his country without a passport.—Answers Magazine.

Nauru, Former German Island

Nauru, former German island possession in the North Pacific ocean, midway between the Marshall and Solomon Islands was captured by the Australians in 1914. At the close of the World War Great Britain, New Zealand and Australia had by agreement, in July, 1919, acquired joint control of the phosphate deposits, which constitute the sole value of the island. However, after the mandate of the Versailles treaty became effective Australia was given complete domination.

In the opening of the continent and the development of natural resources many too many opportunities existed for the creation of such large fortunes. And there was corruption and crookedness. As the more predatory among the wealthy became richer their attempts to obtain personal power became bolder. The development of great industrial corporations facilitated the spread of this power.

The New Dealers today act as if they alone have ever dared fight the greed of entrenched wealth. The Republican party under Theodore Roosevelt went much farther than the New Deal in fighting corruption in high places. In all their fights they were more interested in the curbing of crookedness than in punishing the honestly successful. To the Republicans of thirty years ago there was no greater glory in fighting a corrupt trust than in fighting crookedness on the part of a small business man.

The New Dealers, in contrast, have sought primarily to stimulate resentment against all big business, whether honest or not. They have sought to discredit financial success regardless of whether it had been honest or dishonest. They have stirred up hatred and distrust, and at the same time have put unwarranted curbs on all business, small as well as large, instead of punishing business crooks and helping honest business.

The Republican party believes in giving honest business a fair chance. But if its new leaders are to be true to the earlier Republican tradition they will devise means of helping in particular the men and women of small property, the small business men, those farmers who have managed to hang on to their farms. These are entitled to be heard—and to be given a larger say in the affairs of the party.

What is needed is to make it easier for more people to join this class—to become property owners in a small way, to build up their own small business.

These people are the ones who are getting the real raw deal under the New Deal. They are the ones who are paying for relief, for the benefits handed out to the improvident and the unsuccessful, and for the experiments which all manner of inexperienced political hangers-on are conducting in the name of the New Deal.

Surely they deserve a helping hand from the party which their grandfathers founded and their fathers supported.

The "Laughing Jackass"

Strangers to Australia may hear what sounds like the braying of a jackass in the woods. Investigation, however, will disclose a snappy-looking, colorful bird on the order of the kingfisher, but much larger. It is the kookaburra, native to Australia, one of the brightest and most mischievous birds living. It is known as the "laughing jackass," because of its braying note, and as the "settler's clock," because it utters its peculiar cry regularly at dawn and at dusk. It eats insects, snakes and small mammals, killing the larger prey by flying high with its victim in its beak and dropping it to destruction.

BUDGET FOODS By Ada Bailey Allen Famous Cooking Authority

THE way to make soup popular with your family is to get away from the commonplace varieties and serve something different. Out of Russia has come a traditional soup, called borsch, which has taken the country by storm. It's not difficult to make if you follow this tested recipe:

Russian Borsch

- 1 cup canned tomato
- 2 quarts cold water
- 2 thin slices diced
- 2 small pork (about 2 ounces)
- 1 egg yolk
- 1 tablespoon minced parsley
- 1 cup finely shredded white cabbage
- 2 medium-sized white potatoes, diced
- 1/2 tablespoon flour
- 3 tablespoons salt pork
- 1/2 lb. soup beef
- 1/2 lb. stewing lamb
- 1 1/2 cups finely diced peeled, raw beets
- 1 1/2 teaspoons salt-diced peeled, raw beets
- 1 cup crumbled rye bread
- 1 cup celery, diced
- 1/2 cup slightly sour cream

Dice the meats quite small and place in the soup kettle. Add the beets, carrot, celery, onion, tomatoes and cold water; bring to boiling point, cover and simmer for thirty minutes. Put the salt pork through the food chopper and add to the soup with the parsley; cook thirty minutes longer. Then stir in the cabbage and potatoes and cook until both are tender—about 30 minutes. Stir the all purpose margarine and flour together to make a paste and add to the soup. Add the salt and pepper and rye bread. Just before serving, beat the egg yolk slightly; add take half of the cream and add this a little at a time to the soup, stirring for about two minutes. Then pour into the soup plates and in the center of each float a spoonful of the soup cream.
