

A Little o' This... and a Little o' That

The following item was clipped from the Western City, a magazine published for cities in Oregon, Washington and California: "From a financial standpoint the cities of Oregon are in much the same position as a little boy whose father allows him no opportunity to earn any money. The cities have no way of getting revenue. Whenever a new revenue is developed the state or federal government takes it, and as a result the cities must look to the state and federal governments for support. For that reason cities are now in a very poor position."—Mayor Albert E. Wilson, of Beaverton.

Townsend Play

a feature moving picture and short subjects. The feature picture is "Yellow Dust" starring Richard Dix and Lella Hyams.

The play is a comedy-drama with a rich romantic base, and will be presented in 12 scenes ranging from about four to six minutes each in playing time. To speed action the stage is set with two scenes, one being dark while the other is being played. Four or more performances will be given daily.

Play Receives State Towns' Endorsement

The play has been previewed by prominent proponents of the Townsend plan who have given it enthusiastic approval. Numbered amongst this group are Charles E. Hansen state area manager and M. C. Athey, former member of the state area board. They stated that they were very enthusiastic over the play.

Mr. Athey stated that in his belief "Life Begins at Sixty" will do the same thing for the Townsend Plan that "Ten Nights in a Barroom" did for prohibition.

Mr. Hansen who has worked for the Townsend movement in this district, before becoming state area manager with headquarters in Portland, stated that "Life Begins at Sixty" faithfully portrays the plan from its inception through present times, and on to the aftermath fully expected and desired by Townsend-workers. He commented on the especially good entertainment afforded by this stage play aside from the personal interest which he would naturally have.

Reviewers commented over the interesting plot, exceedingly human heart story, comedy and pathos. An enjoyable evening of entertainment is in store for playgoers who visit the Mayfair during this booking of "Life Begins at Sixty" whether or not they are interested in final passage of the Townsend Plan.

New Line of Gardening Tools Being Marketed

Speedy-Weedy Garden Tool Co., 7400 S. E. 52nd Ave., Portland, has a unique line of lightweight gardening tools for the garden lover. An open hoe is constructed with an open face, the work being done by a steel blade made for hard usage, which is especially liked by strawberry and nursery men as well as home gardeners. For use in strawberry culture, the open hoe makes it possible to do close work while not disturbing plant or feeders which are near the surface. The hoe is self sharpening and does not clog and is useable for all purposes that an ordinary hoe is used.

A tool with a blade two inches on one side and about an inch on the other side is especially good for rock garden work and other close cultivating and weeding where the work is in close quarters.

These tools come with handles 56 inches in length. Shorter handled tools at less cost are offered for celery workers and such.
