OARP Seen as Bureau-Builder

Townsend Tax Collections
Would Require Huge
U. S. Staff.

The American people have become accustomed during the past three years to the creation of large bureaucratic organizations to enforce regulatory laws. The alphabetical agencies thus far set up would be insignificant in comparison with the bureaucracy which would be required to administer the Townsend plan.

As many as 10,000,000 returns would be received monthly from those required to report the payment of taxes.
There are about 6,000,000 farmers, 1,500,000 retail stores, 600,000 employers of domestic servants, 545,000 independent professional men, 175,000 manufacturing establishments, 165,000 wholesalers, 145,000 construction firms, 125,000 firms and service trades, 125-000 banks, stock brokers, etc., 20,000 transportation companies, 15,000 hotels, and 10,000 mines and quarries.

Returns from taxpayers numbering 10,000,000 monthly would mean in a year a total of 120,000,000 to be reviewed and administered.

The handling of checks to pensioners also would represent a huge clerical task. Checks would go out to 8,000,000 or more persons monthly, or nearly 100,000,000 annually.

Just what such a volume of documents would mean may be realized by a comparison with the present task of the Internal Revenue Bureau in connection with income tax laws. Only about 4,000,000 individuals and about 500,000 corporations file income tax returns. Furthermore, income tax returns are filed annually rather than monthly. Even the handling of 4,500-000 returns involves many difficulties and their auditing drags on over a period of years.

The Basset Hound

The basset hound is supposed to have been imported from France into England, but patriotic hound fanders in England are quick to point out that a hound similar to the bas-set must have existed in their country in Shakespeare's time. Shakespeare speaks of this hound as the "Spartan kind." The theory is that Shakespeare referred to a crooked-legged dwarf hound found in southern England. This breed would be called a basset in France.

Garden of Eden
The Britannica says that many speculations have been made as to the site of the garden, thought to be an oasis in a barren land, the verses in Genesis suggesting a site north of Babylon; to define the site from the details given is impossible while any attempt to locate a mythological garden is bound to be attended by considerable difficulty. Funk and Wagnalls' "A Standard Bible Dictionary" says the location has been the subject of many speculations, some of which have nothing but their grotesqueness to give them interest. Palestine, Syria, Armenia, Mongolia, Kashmir, Merv, Australia, Mesopotamia and even the North pole have all been suggested as the site. Of these Lower Mesopotamia and Armenia alone deserve consideration. The writer adds that there is no spot on earth from which one vast river branches into four channels that encircle such tracts of land as are named in the first chapters of Genesis.
