

New Cane Berries Grown To Meet Modern Demands

What the up-to-date berry grower in Oregon, and to a certain extent in the United States, will be growing in the next several decades is being determined now in Uncle Sam's largest can berry testing plots conducted at Corvallis in cooperation with the Oregon State college experiment station. More than 5000 new hybrid berries, the results of planned crosses among raspberries, blackberries, loganberries, Youngberries and even some of the wild salmon berries and less well-known sorts came into fruit for the first time this year. These have been the object of careful observation of trained plant breeders who have recorded the facts about them on which to base future action in discarding certain ones and keeping others for further testing and crossing.

Dr. George M. Darrow, chief of the berry breeding work in the U. S. department of agriculture, has spent a month at Corvallis this year working with his resident associate, George F. Waldo, in checking up on the breeding work. It was Dr. Darrow who spent two years at O. S. C. in establishing the berry breeding work on its present large scale, after a beginning made by C. E. Schuster of the state experiment station staff. Dr. Darrow is enthusiastic about the results achieved already and the promise for the future.

Raspberry crosses resulted in new berries, some of which resemble loganberries in size, others which were bright in color and with the firm flesh sought by shippers, and others which had many desirable characteristics combined, including strong cane growth.

Crosses between Oriental and American species have given hybrids with exceptionally vigorous canes, combined with good cherries. Crosses between the native wild blackberries and tame sorts have given hybrids with commercial size retaining much of the wild blackberry flavor. Crosses between Youngberries and loganberries promise to result in new sorts that will be an improvement on both.

The large scale work must be conducted for several seasons before it with good berries. Crosses between promising enough to warrant distribution. In the meantime further crosses will be made along the lines indicated by past experience.

Plant Patents are New

Granting of patents on plants was not authorized until a few years ago. A law to this effect, the Townsend-Purnell bill, was enacted by Congress in 1930.

SALAD-OF-THE-WEEK

By Elsie Stark

GOOD dinner conversation begins with the food. "You cannot talk well if you do not eat well," says one of our modern authors. And right she is. Don't worry about whether your dinner guests are going to be congenial. Serve congenial food, tasty meat courses, satisfying soup, and, of course, good salads. The conversation will take care of itself.

Spiced Peach Salad

6 canned or fresh peach halves
1/2 cup vinegar
1 stick cinnamon
ground cinnamon
6 whole cloves
1/2 cup sugar
2 tablespoons ground nut meats
Real Mayonnaise

Cook the vinegar, cloves, cinnamon and sugar together three minutes and pour over peaches. Chill several hours. Drain and fill cavity of peach with ground nut meats mixed to a paste with real mayonnaise. Arrange peach halves on crisp lettuce leaves cut-side up. Garnish with real mayonnaise, which costs so little per salad. Serves 6.

Adrain Hornecker Chester White Gilt Award to be Made at County Fair

Adrain Hornecker is again awarding a purebred Chester White gilt as a breed special for the boy or girl who exhibits the best Chester White junior gilt at the Washington County Fair. This is the second year that Adrain has offered this award to the 4-H pig club members. Last year it was won by Merrill Mead of the Bald Mountain pig club.

Adrain's award is one of the principal inducements for club members to participate in pig club work and has played an important part in the large and rapid increase in pig club work in the county during the past two years. Twelve of the thirty club members enrolled in the pig project are raising Chester White pigs and it is expected that there will be approximately 20 head of Chester Whites at the county fair.

Bonneville Dam Nears Completion

National Hospital Association Deserves Commendation for Accident Protection.

Now that the Bonneville Dam nears completion, let us stop and contemplate the outstanding record made by the National Hospital association.

Business men, as employers demand experienced, skilled workmen. It is the only practical way they can assure themselves against loss and failure.

Careful business men look to someone with experience to guide them through uncharted business channels; they seek first-hand knowledge from others who know—from those who gained experience by pioneering in their chosen field.

National Hospital Association—organized over thirty years ago—pioneered in offering medical service for industrial plants. The "Full Coverage Plan" was originated by National for the complete health protection of employees. This plan can save many dollars for your workmen and your company, too. Have you investigated?

National Hospital Association has again made an enviable record inspiring confidence in employer and employee alike on the various contracts on Bonneville Dam construction. This organization has its own hospital and staff on the grounds in addition to care in difficult cases in their Portland offices and in hospitalization in the local hospitals.

And so, when it comes to complete coverage look to the National Hospital association.

National Hospital Association, in service—even greater than its name, is located at 400 Mohawk Building, Portland, Oregon.

New "Goose Stamps"

Federal "duck stamps" will in reality be "goose stamps" this year. The stamps will show three Canadian geese on the wing, one with a biological bird band on its leg. Possession of a duck stamp is required by law of every migratory-waterfowl hunter over 16 years of age.

The Coal Will Last

The United States Bureau of Mines estimates that the coal reserves of the country will last several thousand years. However, the known oil reserves will be exhausted within 15 years at the present rate of consumption.

Dear Sirs:

It pays to advertise. Remarkable evidence of its effectiveness in Beaverton, Aloha, Tigard and Multnomah, where your papers are employed as our major advertising media, is found in the records of our branch manager, C. J. Barnes.

In this area, sales of our advertised brand of motor fuel, known as MOBILGAS, outrank our nonadvertised brand EIGHT to ONE.

This is one of the most outstanding records of Mobilgas leadership that have come to our attention anywhere.

Beside standing as a tribute to the effectiveness of advertising, this Mobilgas leadership also shows eight out of nine residents of your area demand products of the highest grade, being content with nothing but the best. This, we declare, is true economy.

Sales of our Mobiloil, the motor lubricant of world-wide use, also rank unusually high in your district.

The two products mentioned are the ones to which we devote all our advertising effort in your papers. In the remarkable results of our advertising campaign in that area you may take justifiable pride.

We wish to express our appreciation for a splendid volume of business, increasing substantially month by month.

Very truly yours,
