MAINTAINING HIGH EGG PRODUCTION DURING WINTER MONTHS

ing is doing for others, and how it can be applied to your own place.

Warm Drinking Water Important

Experienced poultrymen find it pays to warm drinking water to 50 degrees for laying hens during freezing weather. It has been proved that hens will drink 25% more water if it is warmed, thus avoiding serious production slumps—Automatic poultry water warmers insure a constant supply of water heated to 50 degrees, yet consume no current in warm weather. The heaters will pay for themselves in one cold snap—and at the same time save the annoyance of early-morning water carrying.

Laying House Lighting

Western Oregon poultrymen have long demonstrated the profit in good laying house lighting to maintain high egg production during the winter when egg prices are best. The proper poultry house lighting keeps the hens busy all season, at a cost of from 1c to 3c per bird for electricity—due to Pepeco's low farm electric rates. We welcome an opportunity to show you exactly what such lighting Without obligation, the Pepeco Farm Service Man will survey your poultry lighting and water warming problems in time to help you avoid winter slumps in production. He can help you plan: Proper light size and locations; automatic time control; proper size and styles of water warmers; yard lighting; burglar alarms, and many other profitable applications of electric service to farm work. Just write or phone your nearest Pepeco office.
