DEATH COMES TO NEW LONDON

The appalling disaster in the school at New London, Texas, in which hundreds of students perished when an explosion, followed by fire destroyed a new $1,000,000 building, should bring to public attention an old and grave problem—protection for school children.

Regardless of the cause of this calamity, it emphasized the fact that thousands of schools throughout the nation, including some which are supposedly model plants, contain hazards that may—any day, any minute—result in disasters equally great.

It may seem unbelievable, but the schools still exist in which the doors open inward. If fire broke out, panic-stricken children would pack against these doors, making it impossible to open them. And when the flames were extinguished, blackened, unrecognizable bodies would be found.

In other schools fire escapes are inadequate, or are difficult to reach. In others, heating plants are of poor construction or are in bad repair. In others, stairways are narrow and are so designed and situated that a fire breaking out on a lower story would immediately roar up the stair wells, fed by drafts, making it impossible for children on upper stories to escape. They wouldn't even have a fighting chance for life.

Yes literally thousands of schools contain hazards such as these. Expert from fire preventative organizations have often inspected relatively new school buildings—and found, to the astonishment of the proud board of trustees that they teemed with hazards, any one of which could cause disaster and wholesale death.

Whatever the cause of the New London disaster, it should make the people think—and their thinking should force expert inspection of every school in America, and the elimination of any hazards found.

BUYING THEIR OWN SECURITY

"Government in the insurance business"—put there by the Social Security Act—hasn't stopped the public from purchasing insurance coverage from private companies in unprecedented amounts.

The largest insurance company in the world closed last year with more life insurance in force than ever before—$21,000,000,000. This is indicative of the experience of other companies.

The American people still want to produce future security for themselves and their dependents through their own thrift, wisdom and savings. This is not a criticism of governmental security—it is just praise for the millions of our people who aren't satisfied to depend on it entirely for their old age.

De Forest's New "Dynathern" Fights Flu

Dr. Lee De Forest, wizard of radio and talking pictures, took a look at the influenza epidemic and decided something ought to be done. So, he offered his latest electrical invention in Los Angeles, the "dynathern," to a world suffering from coughs, sneezes and aching muscles. Built on radio principles, the dynathern uses ultra-short waves over a small field. The patient is placed within the range of these impulses. It attacks the organs internally, relieving congestion.

Too many high producing cows have "off years"; it pays in added amounts of milk and fat produced during a lifetime if special effort is made to have such cows dry at least eight weeks before calving.
