rates, which mean cheap operating costs for the financing agency, are a major impetus behind this trend. Another is the government's promotion of home-renewal work and electric-appliance sales on its own guaranteed-installment loans. A third factor is the entrance of commercial banks in to the consumer-credit field.

In fairness I should point out that "easy-payment" plans are in many instances a vast improvement on certain previous methods. For instance the 19 year installment mortgage on new homes is sounder real estate financing than the old 3-year mortgage whose renewal was uncertain. Also "easy-payments" are more conservative in some instances than charge accounts, particularly those charge accounts which are habitually "slow". So long as our national income is swelling, the volume of installment sales can rise along with it. However if these sales continue to expand as rapidly as they have in the past year, installment credit may be one of the bones of our next boom!

The broadening both of volume and type of "time" sales is just another mile-post on the highway to inflation. Our Federal budget is making little progress toward balancing. Bank credit expansion is now underway; commercial loans are more than one billion dollars above a year ago. Financing for new capital last month was $100,000,000 above March of last year. Commodity prices have leapt to the highest level since 1929. Wage boosts throughout all industry are adding fuel to the flames. Prices this autumn should be substantially higher than a year ago. Protect yourself. Anticipate your autumn needs. Shop today; but increase your buying power by paying cash.
