BABSON SAYS

funds for the ordinary day-to-day expenses of the government would be too great for the Treasury to overcome. The recent notice from Washington confirms these fears.

Violating a Trust Social Security money is in the nature of a trust fund. Washington is supposed to invest this money in government bonds so that when the time comes to pay out there will be a sufficient income to take care of all those who have contributed.
Appropriating the receipts, as they come in, for running expenses and issuing bonds against them is a dangerous policy, ethically the violation of a trust. The Old Age Reserve Fund is expected to reach a maximum of over $45,000,000,000 within forty years. It must be invested solely in government bonds. In our federal debt today although the highest in history is only $36,000,000,000.
Hence, this encourages spending by Congress in order to create enough debt so that it can borrow all the Social Security fund and pay interest on it.

If we are to continue with the present law the Reserve Fund provisions should be amended as follows: (1) The Social Security Board should be forced to acquire its government bonds by buying them in the open market. (2) The Social Security Board should be allowed to buy high-grade municipals — and possibly choice corporation issues. I do not think that United States government bonds are necessarily the soundest security in the world. They could suffer just as German and French bonds have suffered. The Old Age Reserve Fund should be diversified just as any soundly-managed trust fund.

Mutual Basis Sounder
The entire Social Security program however should be changed immediately. Congress should put it on a mutual or pay-as-you-go basis. If so the government could begin now to take care of all people who qualify. Each year the country would know exactly what its old age assistance and its unemployment aid is costing assessment would then be made on business just as the losses are assessed on the policyholders of a mutual insurance company. This would eliminate the gigantic reserve fund and all its complications. But if the present set-up continues, I do not see how ultimate inflation can be avoided.
