Stinging Nettle Weeds Among the Most Useful

Stinging nettles are among the most unpopular and, be it known, the most useful of weeds. From time immemorial, observes a writer in London Tit-Bits magazine, the fiber has been used to make cordage, coarse cloth, and even paper.
Young nettle-tops, thoroughly boiled, make a tasty vegetable, and the juice of the leaves cures blood-spitting and other kinds of hemorrhage.
Chopped nettleleaves mixed with their food makes fowls lay in the off season, and imparts a gloss to the coats of cattle and horses.
Boiled leaves of dandelion make an excellent substitute for spinach.
Bleached, they form an agreeable ingredient in a salad. The root has valuable tonic properties, and is particularly good in liver trouble. Many country-folk consider this the finest medicine in the world. They mash the roots in a mortar, and mix with one-third their measure of spirits of wine.

Camomile, another composite plant, is very common on waste ground. The flower-heads provide the familiar camomile tea. Besides being a pleasant drink, this is a fine thing for indigestion. Coltsfoot is another relative of the dandelion, and an excellent cure for coughs.
The leaves are either made into a tea, or dried and smoked in a pipe.
