Babson Says---

Continued from Page 1 Japanese domination. In either case, China, will never be at peace again until the Japanese are absorbed. Everyone here feels that to reverse the centuries-old process of China's absorbing her conquerors is too big a job for even the Japanese to solve. Certainly, Japan has a wonderful opportunity here. Her future, however, depends upon how she treats the Chinese people. Japanese should not forget that China—thanks to American missionaries—is passing through a great spiritual revival. War lords whose families have for generations fought one another are now joining forces. China is learning much from this rebirth of patriotism. If Japan is wise enough to capitalize on this change, historians may some day write that this war marked a milestone in the development of both China and Japan. If, however, Japan fails psychologically, all her military strength will have been for naught.

"Open Door" Shut Tight The Japanese have established a strict censorship of all business as a result of new regulations. The banks are now doing very little business and, of course, most of the rich Chinese have fled to the interior or to foreign ports. Japanese came aboard our ship when we landed here. Their doctors looked at our tongues and their officials looked at our baggage. This interference with commerce and business and these dictatorial practices will surely last throughout the war—and probably throughout Japan's so-called Five Year Plan of Rehabilitation. So it looks like the "Open Door" is closed to Occidentals—at least for many years to come.

I am very fond of the Japanese as a people. I have had one in my home for fifteen years. He has been faithful and kind. Some of my books have been translated into Japanese and I have other contacts. I can sympathize with them for being provoked at China. The Japanese are a wonderful race. If they are now fair with China and the rest of the world, the Chinese "incident"—as they call it—may eventually help both nations. Let us hope that Japan will not make the same mistake in settling with China that the Allies made in settling with Germany in 1919. Japan will be victorious in the end only by being just and generous now.
